SIR RONALD LINDSAY REACHES WARM SPRINGS FOR CONFERENCE ON DEBTS WITH ROOSEVELT

AGREEMENT ENDS THREE-DAY TRIAL; JURY QUIZ SOUGHT

Warrant Against DeKalb Chief Will Be Withdrawn Next Week; Solicitor Smith Accepts "Full Responsibility."

SOLICITOR, HOWARD IN SPIRITED CLASH

Attorney for Plaintiff Assails Confiscation of Property; Smith Claims Seizures for Evidence.

Charges and counter-charges arising from the seizure by A. W. Lilly, DeKalb chief of police, of personal property in a raided house on Johnson road will be thrown into the laps of DeKalb county grand jurors at the March term for a thorough investigation, both sides of the controversy promised Saturday afternoon following a "dogfall" in justice of the peace court at Decatur.

Supporters and opponents of Lilly both claimed victory in the first conflict, which ended in the adoption of an agreement under which Mrs. O. B. Wright is to recover all property which is admitted to be in the custody of Lilly and DeKalb county. Major Claude C. Smith, solicitor-general of the Stone Mountain circuit and a witness in Saturday's concluding session of the three-day trial of a possessory warrant directed against Lilly, said that he will present the case to the grand jury and let the jurors "blow off the lid."

Solicitor-General Smith took "full responsibility" for confiscation of the Wright property, asserting that he ordered the property held as much to protect it from spectators at the raid as for its possible evidence value, and that Lilly acted at his request in seizing and holding the household goods and belongings of the Wrights.

At Friday's hearing, Mrs. George Young, wife of a county officer, testified that Mrs. Lilly gave her a pocketbook, identified as having come from the Wright home, for a birthday present. She also said that she had seen tapestries, identified as among the personal effects seized, in the home of Mrs. Ralph Abercrombie, whose husband also is a county officer.

Oval Mirror Impounded.

Under the agreement, an oval mirror included in the contested property was impounded pending determination of its ownership, Lilly contending that the mirror belongs to him. Attorneys John Wesley Weekes and C. Murphey Candler, representing Lilly, said that the agreement does not cover all of the property claimed by Wright to be held by police, as some of it already has been turned over and receipted for, and other property has never been in possession of the police, but that the agreement covers only that property which the defense admitted was in Lilly's and the county's custody.

Chief Lilly said that he will demand a grand jury investigation of certain facts in connection with the case, but he would not go further into the matter. Lilly said that the compromise was not reached on the initiation of the defense, as "I was not anxious to shut off the discussion." "They say that I am the biggest crook in DeKalb county, but I am going to show

Smith Would Decline Position in Cabinet

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Former Governor Alfred E. Smith, of New York, today said he would not accept a cabinet position in the Roosevelt administration, adding that he was "head of as many things now as I want to be."

"Are you going to accept a cabinet post in the incoming administration?" Smith was asked by newspapermen.

"No, sir," Smith said.

Asked what part he expected to take in the incoming administration, Smith smiled and looked around at a crowd of reporters and said:

"That remains to be seen."

Asked about a report that Senator Copeland, democrat, New York, was to be appointed ambassador to Germany and that he (Smith) would be appointed senator from New York by Governor Lehman, Smith said:

"No. Well, at least half no. The half no applies to me, that is. I'm not going to accept a seat in the senate, but I don't know what Senator Copeland is going to do." He denied he would be head of the R. F. C.

Anti-Foreclosure 'War' Spreads in Middle West

Angry Farmers Threaten Violence to Halt Sales—Agrarian Forces Map Demands. Plan "March" in Nebraska.

By The United Press.

Agrarian unrest gained in the midwest Saturday when aroused farmers united in county after county to force officials to accede to their demands for relief from debt burdens.

The militant Farmers' Holiday Association led in a movement to halt or nullify mortgage foreclosure sales. The association was especially active in Nebraska and Minnesota.

In Minnesota, crowds of farmers threatened violence and forced sheriffs to postpone foreclosure sales.

Nebraska farmers, employing similar tactics, were organizing a march on the state capital in mid-February. The holiday association expected 15,000 farmers to converge on Lincoln.

Wisconsin and Iowa were relatively quiet under governors' proclamations holding up mortgage foreclosures.

At Madison, Wis., Arnold Gilberts, president of the Wisconsin Holiday Association, threatened a statewide farm strike.

AGRICULTURAL "REVOLT" SPREADS OVER NEBRASKA

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 28.—(UP) A new agrarian "revolt" spread tonight over Nebraska prairies where 40 years ago the populist doctrines of William Jennings Bryan were hailed by farmers.

Determined to force a new deal for the farmer, self-appointed leaders were organizing their activities toward two ends:

Stopping all sales of farm homes and farm chattels to satisfy mortgages, debts and tax bills;

A statewide march to the capital to demand a six-point program of relief from the state legislature.

Already the move to halt farm sales has borne fruit. Fine cattle sold for 10 and 15 cents a head in Nebraska this week. New tools were bid in for 50 cents. Stout mule teams brought $1.50.

The farmers controlled the bidding, buying back for neighbors goods that would have been sold to satisfy claims against farms.

In every county, organization of units of the Farmers' Holiday Association was proceeding. These units, according to present plans, will converge upon the state capital in mid-February, 15,000 strong.

These are the farmers' demands:

A cost of production for farm products, plus profit sufficient for a decent living.

Cancellation of seed and feed loans by the government.

Exemption from taxation for heavily-mortgaged lands.

A debt moratorium until prices are lifted.

Free milk and food to unemployed in cities.

Elimination of the middleman, so the farmer can obtain higher prices.

FARMERS' LEADER WARNS OF AGRICULTURAL STRIKE

RAIL GROUP GETS DATA ON CARRIERS

Transportation Problems Discussed With Rayburn and I. C. C.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—The results of a quick but thorough inspection of the government's end of the railroad problem, were carried back to New York tonight by a voluntary citizen's committee with the promise of a definite plan for righting the country's transportation troubles by late February.

The distinguished national transportation committee, of which Calvin Coolidge was chairman until his death, left behind in the capital a quickened activity on various angles of the rail problem which forecast action in several directions before the committee report is issued by February 22.

The members, Bernard M. Baruch, acting chairman; Alfred E. Smith, Clark Howell, of Atlanta, and Alexander Legge, of Chicago, conferred at the capitol with Representative Rayburn, chairman of the house interstate commerce committee, examining pending legislation, then went to the interstate commerce commission for an extended discussion with the officials who direct rail regulation.

Indorsement Withheld.

Smith, acting as committee spokesman, set the date for the report and said the committee was in sympathy with the rail bankruptcy plan of the LaGuardia-McKeown bill, but declined to indorse it specifically. He did approve Rayburn's pending bill to repeal the recapture clause under which the government is authorized to take a portion of excess railroad profits.

Definite new energy was put behind this and other legislation, although the bankruptcy act was the only one appearing to have distinct chances of passage at the present session.

Another attack on rail problems, however, was launched by Senator Couzens, who, as chairman of a banking subcommittee, started investigating Reconstruction Corporation loans to determine whether his resolution to forbid any more such credits for a time should be adopted.

Couzens said the committee would require estimates of the present value of collateral put up for such loans; would demand the names of roads likely to have to borrow within the next six months; and would call upon the R. F. C. to give a complete summary of the loans made and where the money went.

Would Protect Public.

"It is not to the interest of the security holders or the public," the senator said, "that the government con-

Kidnaped Baby Found In Iowa Woman's Home

DES MOINES, Iowa, Jan. 28.—(AP) Mrs. Margaret Shanklin, 32, was held here today after city detectives said they found Norman Eugene Leoll, six-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. August Leoll, reported kidnaped January 11, in her home.

Mrs. Shanklin, officers said, admitted taking the baby because "she loved him so." She was identified, they said, as the "Mrs. Garrison," who had been employed in the Leoll home.

MYSTERY CLOAKS LEAS' ACTIVITIES

Former Publisher and Son Reported Arrested in Small Village.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Sheriff J. M. Peavyhouse, of Fentress county, talking by telephone from Jamestown, tonight denied reports that Colonel Luke Lea and Luke Lea Jr. had been taken into custody there.

"They absolutely were not arrested, did not surrender and I have no papers for them," said the sheriff, who contradicted reports he had left in an automobile with the Leas yesterday afternoon.

Asked if he had seen the Nashville publisher and his son, for whom the governor of North Carolina has signed a requisition, the sheriff said, "if I did, I didn't know it," explaining he did not know them.

Sheriff Peavyhouse explained his absence since yesterday afternoon by saying he had been up near the Kentucky border looking for an escaped prisoner. He said the prisoner, held for cattle stealing, escaped jail Thanksgiving Day. "I think I've got him located right in the edge of Kentucky," he added.

The sheriff returned to Jamestown early tonight.

W. A. Garrett, a Jamestown attorney, who also was reported today to have left with the Leas in their car, denied tonight that he had and said he was "pretty sure" they were not in Fentress county.

Garrett said he was a "friend of Colonel Lea."

Asked when he last saw him, the attorney replied:

"Without meaning to be discourteous, I decline to say when was the last time I saw him."

Circuit Court Clerk J. G. Reagan, of Fentress county, reported during the day that the Leas had arrived in Jamestown in the early hours of yesterday morning, had gone to Attorney Garrett's office and had left about 1 o'clock in the afternoon in an automobile with Garrett, J. B. Reagan, another lawyer, and Sheriff Peavyhouse. He had seen them in the car, the court clerk said, and

Eagle Far in Lead In Texas House Race

HOUSTON, Texas, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Joe H. Eagle, former representative in congress, appeared to be headed back to Washington as returns from a special election to select a successor to the late Representative Daniel E. Garrett, of the eighth Texas district, were tabulated tonight.

Eagle, a Houston democrat who advocates prohibition repeal, took a commanding lead over a field of 33 candidates from the time of the first unofficial tabulation of votes. Clarence Miller was the only republican in the race.

The incomplete vote tonight gave Eagle 6,022; Chester H. Bryan 1,771, and Robert L. Cole, who appealed for "dry" support, 1,368.

Only scattered votes had been cast for the 30 other candidates.

Eagle, who served in congress from 1913 until 1921, has announced he favors payment of the soldier bonus. He was defeated by Garrett in the democratic primaries last summer.

EMPLOYES OF CITY HIT FUND INCREASE FOR SCHOOL FORCE

City Hall Association Assails "Unjust" Legislation, Calls on Assembly To Defeat Bill.

Sharp division in the ranks of municipal employes developed Saturday with the 2,800 employes of other city departments aligned against the 1,900 employes of the board of education in opposition to a proposed charter amendment to increase school appropriations from 26 per cent to 30 per cent of the city's revenue.

An aroused executive committee of the Atlanta City Hall Employes' Association adopted unanimously resolutions calling on legislators to defeat the proposed amendment, and laid tentative plans to march en masse Monday on the capitol to voice their opposition.

At the same time W. Evans Chambers, president; Joe Ray, vice president, and Charles Henson, member of the executive committee of the association, issued a joint statement scoring the pending bill as "favoritism and unjust."

Approved by Committee.

The bill, having the approval of Representatives William B. Hartsfield, George Eckford and Luther Still, Fulton representatives in the Georgia assembly, already has obtained the sanction of the municipal government committee of the house.

Because of the fact that its legality has been attacked, however, there is a strong probability that it will be withdrawn, advertised and then reintroduced, it was said Saturday. Councilman G. Dan Bridges, chairman of council's police committee, raised that point Friday, when he said proponents failed to comply with the law and advertise it 30 days before offering it.

Another Cut Would Be Needed.

In a statement by officials of the City Hall Employes' Association Saturday, it was pointed out that passage of the measure would force a further cut in the revised January finance sheet to absorb the $330,000 which, under the bill, would be added to school funds.

They held that this sum could come from one source only—the salaries of other employes of the municipality, who already have cuts ranging upward to 26 per cent.

"If this amendment is passed, an additional cut of 12.5 per cent must be made on employes of other departments for the purpose of keeping school department salaries up," the statement said.

"This means that the 2,800 other employes of the city who draw an aggregate salary of approximately the same as the 1,900 school department employes and who work 12 months a year instead of nine, will be forced to make other unjust sacrifices to protect a favored department.

"Administration leaders say they

Publisher Missing From Florida Home

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Jan. 28.—(UP)—The disappearance of W. Hetherington Taylor, 74, former owner of the publication Iron Age, was disclosed today by his son, Garvin P. Taylor, managing editor of the Montclair Times.

Taylor disappeared at St. Petersburg, Fla., and it is feared he is a victim of amnesia. Police in Phoenix, Ariz., where he previously had a winter home, were asked to watch for him.

Taylor was driven to a motion picture theater in St. Petersburg by his chauffeur last Thursday afternoon. He did not return home.

Taylor was born in Buffalo, N. Y. and owned various technical publications prior to his association with the Taylor Publishing Company. He acquired the Iron Age Publishing Company in 1908 and later became treasurer of United Publishers Corporation. His permanent home is in Montclair.

Taylor's home in St. Petersburg is at 305 Eighth avenue, northeast.

Mrs. Roosevelt Greets Sir Ronald; Briton Optimistic Over Debt Parley

Here is the nation's first lady-elect extending on behalf of her husband, President-elect Franklin D. Roosevelt, a welcome to the British ambassador to the United States, Sir Ronald Lindsay. The photograph was made Saturday night at the Atlanta Biltmore, where Sir Ronald and Mrs. Roosevelt met on their way to Warm Springs where the president-elect and the ambassador later discussed the forthcoming debt and economic conference. Staff photo by George Cornett.

By L. A. FARRELL.

Great Britain's ambassador to the United States, Sir Ronald Lindsay, sat in a suite at the Atlanta Biltmore Saturday night and talked in glowing terms of the forthcoming international debt conference, a parley which he said he believed would go far toward restoring normal economic conditions.

The ambassador stopped here for about four hours on his way to Warm Springs, where late Saturday night he entered into formal discussions of the British debt problem with President-elect Franklin D. Roosevelt. Their discussions are to be concluded today.

"The debt difficulties of Great Britain and other nations are a paramount cause of the world-wide business inactivity," Sir Ronald said. "Needless to say I am more than hopeful of the outcome. Of course, I cannot speak for my government any further than I have spoken, but I believe the news that President-elect Roosevelt is going to open the debt situation up for discussion is the best news England and the world has had in a long time."

Sir Ronald bore evidence of his pleasure over the sudden turn of events. He said he would have much to report to Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald when he reaches London, whence he is sailing from New York at midnight Tuesday. He said he couldn't go into terms of revision any further than his government has gone in recent notes exchanged between Britain and this country, but his whole person bespoke confidence.

The ambassador arrived in Atlanta shortly after 5 o'clock in an Eastern Air Transport plane from Washington. He traveled alone, bringing only an overnight bag and a British briefcase which contained the papers over which he and the president-elect will ponder during their discussions at Warm Springs. The ambassador went to the Biltmore to await the arrival of Mrs. Roosevelt, who accompanied him to Warm Springs later Saturday night. Mrs. Roosevelt flew

ATLANTA TAXI MAN SLAIN AND ROBBED

Rumors of hoarded wealth were blamed by county police Saturday for the slaying from ambush and the robbery of W. Hamp McGee, 72-year-old independent taxi driver, whose body was found in his solitary lodgings on Dollar road early Saturday morning. He had been shot in the back with a shotgun, apparently on Thursday night, according to the police.

An inquest was held Saturday afternoon and a verdict was returned that McKee was killed "by person or persons unknown."

McGee, a bachelor, lived alone on the little road off Gordon road where he operated a one-car taxi service from the end of the West View car line. He was killed by an assailant who fired from the dark of Thursday night while McGee stood before a mirror preparatory to shaving.

The taxi operator had always been punctual in his rounds, and when he failed to appear with his taxi Friday and Saturday mornings, a neighbor went to investigate. C. D. Bartlett Sr. discovered the body stretched face upward on the floor of the bedroom. County Policemen E. W. Wilson and L. C. Clay began an investigation at once.

The officers discovered knee prints beneath the porch of the little home, which, they believe, indicates that the slayer lay hidden awaiting McGee's return to his home from work. There were footprints in the ground beneath the window to the bedroom and evidence that the gun was fired through a window.

The gun used was a 12-gauge shotgun and the shell had been cut so that the shotgun shell became a slug when the charge was fired. The shell struck McGee in the back, passed through

'Insurance Plot' Seen As 'Mourner' Is Jailed

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Jan. 28.—(UP)—Detectives investigating a suspected plot to insure victims and then sell them bad liquor took a "mourner" into custody today at the graveside of Frank Sadowski.

Prosecutor Thomas A. Burke Jr. also ordered the arrest of two other men for questioning.

The "mourner" now held is a bootlegger, authorities said.

He was beneficiary of $48,000 in insurance policies carried on Sadowski, police said.

'ATTACK' BLAMED BY FORD FOR HALT

DETROIT, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Henry Ford, in a statement tonight, announced that his automobile plants throughout the country "one way or another will be going again full tilt in a very short time."

At the same time he said that the labor trouble in local body plants that forced a shutdown of his factories throughout the country "is not a strike—it's an attack on the Ford industries."

The statement, the first Mr. Ford has made since he was quoted abroad as saying over the telephone that "certain competitors" were responsible for the body plant strike, was very brief. He declined to comment on the telephone interview with a London newspaper, but said:

"You just can't stop progress. This is not a strike—it's an attack on the Ford industries. So was the Selden patent suit years ago, but all efforts of that kind to throttle any industry is like a man throwing ashes into the wind; eventually he gets himself all

ALLOTMENT BILL UNDER HEAVY FIRE

By F. G. VOSBURGH.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Buffeted by criticisms, the domestic allotment farm relief bill tonight faced another full week of hearings before the senate agriculture committee can get to work on it with a view to reporting it to the senate.

The heaviest barrage of opposition yet is expected to be laid down on Monday when the packers open up against the measure with G. F. Swift, of the Institute of American Meat Packers, as their big gun.

A flat prediction of failure for the allotment price boosting plan unless it is accompanied by measures for currency and credit expansion was given a house committee today by the head of one of the big farm organizations which united to draw it up.

Only "Pittance" for Farmer.

The statement was made by John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers' Union, during hearings on inflations before the ways and means committee. He has stated previously that he regards the bill only as a "pittance" for the farmer.

Before the senate committee four more voices were added to the chorus of criticism which the controversial measure passed by the house more than two weeks ago has raised.

Objections came from a college professor, a hog raiser, a farmer and live stock man and the publisher of an agricultural journal.

"This bill seems to be a novel experiment that some people want to try out on the farmers," said Henry Wood, who raises hogs on his 320-acre farm near Moville, Iowa.

MAJOR PROBLEMS TO BE DISCUSSED IN MEETING TODAY

War Debts, World Economics, Disarmament Issues Expected To Be Included in Parleys at "Little White House."

STIMSON GIVES AID IN ARRANGING MEET

Roosevelt Will Seek More Complete International Understanding on Matters of Importance.

By FRANCIS M. STEPHENSON.

WARM SPRINGS, Ga., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Franklin D. Roosevelt, private citizen, and Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British ambassador, will sit down here tomorrow to talk of war debts, disarmament and what is good for the world in a period of economic stress.

The conference, an unpretentious one to be held in the "Little White House" of the president-elect, is almost unparalleled in the history of America.

Sir Ronald motored from Atlanta tonight with Mrs. Roosevelt after both had come to Georgia by airplane during the day but he did not meet Mr. Roosevelt because of his late arrival. Neither would the ambassador make a statement until after he talks with the president-elect tomorrow.

In this unprecedented bridging of the gap between administrations on foreign affairs, President-elect Roosevelt took the initiative with the full co-operation of the outgoing secretary of state, Henry L. Stimson.

With the international situation now obviously in his control, Mr. Roosevelt asked Ambassador Lindsay to call at the "Little White House" on Pine mountain to go over in a most general way the war debts, world economic and disarmament problems now facing the two governments.

A more complete understanding on the fact that the democratic president-elect intends to link the economic problem very definitely with the March discussions on war debts relief is probably the basis for the invitation.

Word from Washington that Sir Ronald was to leave for London on Tuesday was said by Mr. Roosevelt to have prompted the meeting. It gives opportunity to convey in general outline the ideas he has for restoration of world currency stabilization and trade in return for the war debts relief asked by Great Britain.

Most certainly, the Roosevelt word today that economics and disarmament were among the subjects for discussion links these topics with the impending debt relief talks.

Also, the meeting shows Mr. Roosevelt playing the lone hand he intends to continue in the forthcoming debt negotiations. Because he will deal personally with the European debtors there persists speculation that Ramsay MacDonald, the British prime minister, may be the one to come to Washington to talk with Roosevelt early in March.

Also Mr. Roosevelt had a dinner

BOMBING PROBED IN PHILADELPHIA

Blast Wrecks Home of Head of Sons of Italy, Killing Wife.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Police tonight were seeking clues to an "inspector" who is believed to have planted a bomb in the home of John M. Di Sylvestro, national head of the Sons of Italy, destroying the house, killing his wife and injuring 16 persons.

Authorities were convinced only a bomb of dynamite could have torn the house to pieces as did the blast early today. A man, since learned to have been an impostor, made an "inspection" in the basement yesterday.

Mrs. Elizabeth Di Sylvestro, wife of the prominent attorney, banker and supreme venerable of the Sons of Italy in the United States and Canada, apparently died instantly as the three-story house collapsed.

Four Children Escape Death.

Four children and their governess fell from the third story to the first, but escaped death. They were injured, as were also 11 persons living in the neighborhood.

Di Sylvestro was not at home at the time. Legal adviser to the Italian consul in Philadelphia, he had been conferring with an assistant United States district attorney and was nearing his home when the terrific blast shook southern Philadelphia.

Police, recalling a minor bombing at the same place in 1927, favored the theory that political enemies or radicals attempted to destroy the Di Sylvestro family. The father, a friend of Benito Mussolini, has been an active supporter of fascism, they said.

Di Sylvestro was in no condition to be questioned, authorities declared, but a cousin, John J. Sabatino, talked with him.

Sabatino said Di Sylvestro believed the bombing to be the "work of anarchists who oppose his support of Mussolini."

The first police on the scene of the explosion went through holes in the wall of an adjoining house to get out the victims. They found the children and the governess, but it was more than seven hours before firemen recovered Mrs. Di Sylvestro's body.

Governess Seriously Hurt.

Marie Guerino, 37, the governess, was the most seriously hurt, suffering a possible skull fracture and concussion of the brain. Helen Di Sylvestro, 14, has an injured ankle as well as cuts and bruises. Anita and Gloria, 10-year-old twins, and Arnold, 19, received superficial injuries. All are suffering from shock. Three other children are in school in Florence, Italy.

Susie Green, a domestic, told police that a man came to the house in South Broad street yesterday and said he was an inspector for the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company. Because of subway construction under the street, she said he told her, he wanted to inspect the cellar for cracks. He was down there some time. Miss Green said she noticed no package when he entered. A check of all such inspectors showed that none was sent there, the transit company said.

have cut all that can be taken from the other departments in the revised budget and a study of the revised sheet convinces us that this is so."

The executive committee of the association Saturday adopted the following resolution regarding the amendment:

"Whereas a charter amendment has been introduced in the legislature which if passed will increase the school allotment from the present 26 per cent of all city revenue to 30 per cent and compel the mayor and council to draw an entirely new finance sheet so as to increase the school appropriation this year by approximately $350,000

"And whereas there is only one source from which this money can be obtained—a further reduction in the salaries of all city employes other than in the school department. This reduction will have to be at least 12.5 per cent in addition to the 20 per cent which has already been suffered by the greater portion of these employes.

"And whereas this association realizes that city expenses must be reduced in order to meet the constantly dwindling revenues and that this is no time to ask for an increase to any department

"And whereas there are approximately 1,400 teachers and approximately 500 other employes including janitors of schools in the city service compared to about 2,800 employes in all other departments and that the school pay roll at present is approximately the same total as all other departments combined which include police, fire, water, sanitary, health, construction, parks, Grady hospital, libraries and the entire force of city hall employes. The members of the City Employes' Association have always been ready and willing to accept their share of the sacrifice which is necessary in order to meet the financial stringency brought on by the depression and are willing now to do so, but is it fair to force these 2,800 employes to submit to an additional 12.5 per cent reduction in their salaries in order that the school appropriation may be increased? We believe that the mayor and council were equally fair to the schools and other departments in their apportionment of city finances in the recently-adopted budget.

"Therefore be it resolved by the City Employes' Association that we earnestly urge the members of the legislature from Fulton and DeKalb counties as well as the two senators from the Atlanta district to defeat this charter amendment."

Indiana City Mayor Named on 166th Ballot

TIPTON, Ind., Jan. 28.—(UP) W. A. Compton took office as mayor today after the city council voted 165 times in an effort to name a new executive.

There were only four members of the city council present at the election. With monotonous regularity tellers counted the four ballots and found them tied each time two to two for P. W. Utterback, council president, and H. A. Binkley.

Finally, as the stack of ballots ran low, a compromise was reached electing Compton, 3 to 1.

CITY EMPLOYES TO BE PAID SOON

January Pay Roll Will Be Met by Saturday, Officials Are Confident.

Payment of 4,500 municipal employes for January services within the next week was planned Saturday by Mayor James L. Key, B. Graham West, city comptroller, and Alderman Ed A. Gilliam, chairman of the finance committee of council. Checks will be distributed by next Saturday.

Confidence that Atlanta bankers will extend at least the $400,000 credit necessary to meet the pay roll was expressed by administration leaders Saturday despite the fact that members of the Atlanta Clearing House Association continued to study the revised city budget.

If, however, banks decline to loan the money, a scrip issue will be made to meet the pay rolls with city heads contending further cuts cannot be made in the sheet.

All Will Be Paid.

All city employes, including school teachers and other school attaches, will be included in the projected salary payment, the first since scrip was issued early in December to meet November salaries. Funds for retirement of the first scrip issue already have been posted with banks and the city is calling for redemption although the securities do not mature until March 1.

No call for the board of education for formulation of the 1933 budget has yet been made, it was announced by Dr. Noah W. Baird, president. It developed Saturday, however, that Gilliam and other administration heads will insist that a budget be prepared based on school allocations as carried on the revised finance sheet before other salary payments for school departmental employes are approved.

January salaries of school employes will be issued with the same deductions in pay rolls as the revised budget carries for other city employes.

If after the school budget is approved, additional cuts must be made in such salaries, deductions will be made from subsequent pay rolls to absorb any overpayment the January checks may carry.

Total school allocations from all sources as carried in the revised January budget are $2,500,562.80.

Gilliam Saturday asked that a meeting of the board of education be called immediately to consider a school budget. Reticence of board leaders to call the meeting was regarded as an effort to defer action until the Georgia assembly acts on a proposed charter amendment forcing the city to set up 30 per cent of the revenue of the city for maintenance and operation of schools instead of 26 per cent as carried in the revised general city budget.

MRS. ROOSEVELT GREETS SIR RONALD AT WARM SPRINGS

down from Washington in a special plane of the E. A. T.

Sir Ronald smokes incessantly and talks whiles he smokes. He refused American cigarets but insisted that the cigarets he smokes are made of American tobacco even though the cigarets themselves are manufactured in England.

Regarding his traveling alone, Sir Ronald said he often found it "wholesome" to go about without either a personal aid of a secretary.

"I see so much of people whom I am associated at the embassy that it makes me feel good to get off by myself sometimes," he said. "They are all good in their places but I am not going to have anyone with me when I am talking with Mr. Roosevelt and I am just going to absorb his views and report them to my superiors when I get back home. You see, the president-elect's thoughts can best be conveyed while we're just sitting down talking this whole thing over and as there won't be any need for secretaries we won't have any."

Sir Ronald, an aviation enthusiast, said he enjoyed the trip down from Washington immensely.

"I read and I slept and spent some of the time just gazing at the scenery," he declared. "Once or twice, too, I tried to decide how much chance we would have if the motors up front went dead. After all, though, I like flying better than any other mode of travel."

The ambassador said he was completely and agreeably surprised when Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson informed him late Friday night that Mr. Roosevelt desired to confer with him before he sailed for England.

"I like the way President-elect Roosevelt does things," he said. "It was late Friday night before I knew he wanted to see me and, of course, I readily accepted his invitation. Mr. Stimson arranged for the plane and here I am in Atlanta. Twenty-four hours ago I had not the slightest idea that I would be anywhere other than Washington."

Sir Ronald was met at Candler field by Major General Edward L. King, commander of the fourth army corps area, and by Adjutant General Lindley L. Camp, who greeted the distinguished visitor on behalf of Governor Eugene Talmadge, who is spending the week-end on the south Georgia

Sir Ronald Lindsay and Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt Dine Here

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and her party, en route to Warm Springs, met Sir Ronald Lindsay, Great Britain's ambassador to the United States, here Saturday night. They then proceeded to Warm Springs, where Mrs. Roosevelt will visit her husband and the ambassador will plan with the president-elect for the March debt and economic conference. They are shown in the top picture having dinner at the Atlanta Biltmore. From left to right are Mrs. Henry Morganthau Jr., wife of one of Mr. Roosevelt's advisers; Sir Ronald, Mrs. Roosevelt and Louis M. Howe, the president-elect's political secretary. The lower photograph was taken at Candler field, where Sir Ronald arrived late Saturday afternoon. At the left is Adjutant General Lindley Camp, welcoming him to Atlanta on behalf of Governor Eugene Talmadge, who was absent from the city, while on the right is Major General Edward L. SIR RONALD LINDSAY TO MEET ROOSEVELT engagement tonight with the Columbia University law school class of 1907 of which he was a member. This reunion brings two of New York's prominent republican leaders, William J. Donovan and George Z. Medalie, to the table with the president-elect.

From the little Georgia cottage that gives a view for miles around, Mr. Roosevelt and Sir Ronald tomorrow will get to the serious business of international relations.

Whether intended or not, the novel separate meetings the president-elect is arranging with the foreign powers are believed to be driving a wedge in any European alliances that may exist today, but no slightest intimation that such a purpose was sought has been suggested here.

There has been no reaction from Mr. Roosevelt whatever on the recent British note accepting his proposal to combine an economic discussion with the war debts talk but to limit drastically the scope of the economic moves.

Perhaps this is the reason for the Lindsay conference. At least that undoubtedly will come up. It is expected Mr. Roosevelt will make it clear that in linking the proposed world conference with the separate debt talks he will show just how far he wants to go.

Only the agenda for the economic parley is expected to be arranged by the ecomonic missions to come to Washington with the debts representative. But Mr. Roosevelt most certainly intends to get something in return for debt relief.

News that the French cabinet had fallen brought no reaction here nor was there any fresh sign of the attitude of the Roosevelt mind toward the French debt payment which was not met in December. Meanwhile, there is no arrangement with France, Belgium and the others who defaulted for reviewing their debts.

BRITISH WELL PLEASED WITH PLANS FOR PARLEY

LONDON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Sir Ronald Lindsay's departure for Warm Springs, Ga., to visit President-elect Roosevelt was viewed with satisfaction today in Whitehall circles, where it was felt that the ambassador thus would be able to present more clearly to Downing street when he returns the views of the president-elect.

While it was understood that Sir Ronald was under no definite instructions, it was regarded as entirely possible that he might outline to Mr. Roosevelt the British position, as enunciated by Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain in his speech at Leeds and in the subsequent British agreement to enter into new debt talks.

As viewed here, the British, by cleverly parrying Mr. Roosevelt's inference that debts and economic conditions were to be discussed simultaneously, hope to have forced the Washington conference to be narrowed down to debts alone. It was felt that the conference between Mr. Roosevelt might serve very useful purposes.

In his Leeds speech, Mr. Chamberlain reiterated that Britain would prefer all-around cancellation of debts and reparations, but if that was too much for America to accept, the British would negotiate, keeping in mind two points, that the settlement must be final and that German reparations must not be resumed.

CHANCELLOR HINTS OF TERMS FOR RETURN TO GOLD BASIS

BIRMINGHAM, England, Jan. 28. (AP)—Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, in a speech here tonight, made clear the conditions under which Great Britain will return to the gold standard.

"We are not going to trust ourselves again to the gold standard," he said, "unless and until we are assured it will work. In order to be sure it will work, there has to be an international agreement as to the conditions under which it shall be worked."

150 Held in Chicago For Demonstration

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Five hundred or more demonstrators tried to protest at the Japanese consul's office against militarism today and about 150 of them rode to police stations in patrol wagons.

Policeman Bernard Deshon was struck on the head with a club and another patrolman was temporarily blinded by pepper. Several demonstrators likewise were thumped on the heads, but the police mostly confined themselves to swinging threateningly with the pick-ax handles they carried for clubs.

The arrests occurred in front of the Tribune Tower, where the consul's office is located.

liott Roosevelt, her son; Louis MacHenry Howe, the president-elect's political secretary; Mrs. Henry Morganthau Jr., wife of one of Mr. Roosevelt's closest advisers, and Gene Vidal, coast. He was driven to the Biltmore for a short rest before the arrival of Mrs. Roosevelt and her party.

In Mrs. Roosevelt's party were Elformer West Point football star, a friend of the Roosevelt family. Mrs. Roosevelt will return to Atlanta Tuesday for a lecture that afternoon at Rich's tea room.

Sir Ronald said he would return to Washington by train today, leaving on the noon train, the Crescent, if the conferences were concluded in time for him to catch it, otherwise he would take the Piedmont, which leaves at 5:15 o'clock this afternoon.

Roosevelt-Hoover Accord Is Cited As 'Significant' by Dr. Ashby Jones

The recent Roosevelt-Hoover meeting at the White House was of vital significance to the world in that it gave assurance that war debts at last are to be linked with other vital relations and interests of the nation. This viewpoint on the conversations between the president-elect and Mr. Hoover was expressed Thursday by Dr. M. Ashby Jones in the last of the series of Scottish Rite benefit lectures on "America in the World Current."

"This move, to my mind," said Dr. Jones, "is the most significant which has been made in international affairs in three years. World conditions are to be treated as a whole, so that the varied interests of the nations may be seen in their varied relations to each other."

Dr. Jones said that when the story of the meetings between Mr. Roosevelt and Secretary of State Stimson, and Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hoover is made public, he believes that it will be found that Norman H. Davis was the diplomatic influence responsible for closing the gap between the outgoing and incoming administrations.

Refers to Far East.

"First," he continued, "let us glance at the Roosevelt-Stimson conference. About a year ago, after Japan had seized Manchuria, the present administration declared as the policy of the United States its unwillingness to recognize the acquisition of any territory by aggressive military force. The League of Nations accepted this doctrine as its own policy. In the meantime the Lytton commission appointed by the League declared in its report that the government of Manchukuo, set up over Manchuria, but set up and controlled by the military power of Japan, was not constituted by the voluntary action of the people of Manchuria.

"This report has been before the League for discussion and action, since the early fall. Since this report was made the presidential election in the United States took place, which resulted in the change of administration. Under the awkward provision of our constitution the new administration does not come into power for four months after the election. We may pause here long enough to rejoice that since we talked together last Thursday, the necessary number of states have ratified the twentieth amendment, which provides that the president elected in November shall take office the following January, together with the new congress, thus banishing forever the national, the international nuisance of the "lame duck" administration and congress.

Sees Geneva Anxious.

"But the world, as well as ourselves, have been embarrassed by the old constitutional provision. Mr. Roosevelt does not come into power until the 4th of next March. Geneva has been anxiously wondering whether the new administration at Washington will stand by the Hoover-Stimson doctrine as it applies to the far east. All was vacillation and impotence at the League council board. Then Secretary Stimson had a quiet talk with President-elect Roosevelt. Then Secretary Stimson let it be known in Geneva, and thus around the world, that the president-to-be after the 4th of March stands by the Hoover-Stimson doctrine of non-recognition of territory acquired by any nation through military force. Instantly the attitude of the League stiffened, and its policy become more definite and determined.

"I am very far from saying that the future course of the League in that far eastern problem is at all clear, or that any final results can be prophesied, but only that this declaration of the attitude of Mr. Roosevelt made it possible for the League to take the next step. This next step was to place a time limit in which Japan was to accept the League's overtures for reconciliation between Japan and China. As was expected this was rejected by Japan and the council has now appointed a committee to draw up resolutions, which shall express its judgment. What that judgment shall be, and the form of its expression, is exceedingly uncertain.

Two Methods Seen.

"There are, roughly speaking, two rather divergent lines of procedure advocated. One would definitely and directly condemn Japan's course, and would logically lead, if Japan did not yield, to some form of force. The other course might be characterized as a course of patient pressure, trusting ultimately to the force of a united moral condemnation. Frankly I do not believe the League will, or can, take the first course. As we saw in one of our studies, the authority of any new sovereignty grows exceedingly slowly. We illustrated that in the exceedingly slow growth of the authority of our own constitution with its supreme court. The League is quite young. The national elements which compose it, and on which it must depend for support and strength, are far from being united in aspirations and interests. Japan has been following a course, made familiar in the past by well-nigh every other member of the League. It seems to me it would be supreme folly, fronting this first major test of the strength of this international covenant, to put it to the test of breaking.

"The second course, which we have called 'moral pressure,' is not a surrender of the vital principle of the League, which is ultimately to make a warless world, in which the nations can find the fullest co-operation. The universal 'non-recognition' of territory acquired by military force, would isolate the aggressor nation to a position of very great disadvantage. This might very well lead to a policy of non-co-operation, commercially and financially, which would be completely effective. Of course, the United States and Russia should be in the League to make any united action of the nations most effective. However, the United States, acting under the Kellogg-Briand and the nine-power Pacific pacts, is for the present co-operating.

Roosevelt and Hoover.

"But of more immediate interest and importance was the meeting of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hoover. With no pomp or parade, the next president quietly entered the White House, and when the present president stepped forward to greet him, it was symbolic of a national unity and oneness of purpose in dealing with our world problems, which has been vitally needed ever since the day of election. This meeting was for the definite purpose of determining a policy which could be pursued by both the present and the incoming administrations, in regard to intergovernmental debts. It had become apparent to everyone, that all the programs and policies which might be adopted for the betterment of world conditions, halted for lack of knowledge as to what would be the attitude of the incoming president, toward our debtor nations. A joint statement from Hoover and Roosevelt, issued at the close of this conference, revealed that the nations which had met their obligations to us in December would be invited by the present administration to send representatives to Washington after March 4 to discuss their obligations with Mr. Roosevelt and his advisors. Not only this, but it was made known that Mr. Roosevelt would be glad if these nations at the same time, would send those who could discuss with us, questions of tariffs and exchange—in a word, general commercial conditions—preparatory to the world economic conference, which is to follow. Thus are debts at last to be linked with other vital relations and interests of the nations. This to my mind is the most significant move which has been made in international affairs in three years. World conditions are to be treated as a whole, so that the varied interests of the nations may be seen in their vital relations to one another.

Approves Action on Debts.

"There was another significant statement made by the man who is to be president after March 4. While he did not issue an invitation to the so-called 'defaulting' nations, he let it be known that they would be welcomed to a discussion of their obligations, whenever they wanted to come. This is most welcome and reassuring. The action of the French deputies in refusing to pay the installment of twenty millions, when due last December, was the short-sighted action of a people politically irritated, by what they believed to be the unjust political course of another nation. Certainly the action of our congress in rudely refusing even to discuss the debt question was calculated to arouse their anger. And just here is the crux of the whole business. It was not a reasonable, but a purely emotional reaction, to what had been an unreasonable and politically emotional action on our part. The after-effects in America of French defalcation was the inevitable expression of human nature. Our people got mad. Anti-French explosions have occurred all over the country. Here two great nations like two small boys daring each other to fight have forgotten the worldwide interests involved. It is most heartening that just at the time the Hearst papers, with their characteristic carelessness of the supreme human interests involved, are seeking to arouse the prejudices and hatreds of our people for all foreign nations, Franklin Roosevelt, with self-controlled wisdom, declared he is ready to meet all the nations, 'and France,' in an atmosphere of peace and reason to discuss our differences. This utterance, to my mind, is the prophesy of many good things and not least among them is the promise. William Randolph Hearst is not to be president after March 4."

Portland's water wagon street flushing system might be "all wet" in every sense of the word, but it wasn't wet enough recently when one of the wagons caught fire and it was necessary to call out fire-fighters to extinguish the blaze.

Marion Talley's Marriage To German Pianist Annulled

Broken Pre-Nuptial Promise Cited by Singer; Former Opera Star Seeks Seclusion.

LONG BEACH, Cal., Jan. 28.—(AP) The brief romance of Marion Talley, of Kansas City, former Metropolitan opera singer, has ended in the annulment of her marriage to Michael Raucheisen, 43-year-old German concert pianist of international reputation.

The annulment was granted last night in superior court here on the singer's charge that her husband had violated a pre-nuptial agreement by refusing to allow Miss Talley's mother and sister to live with them.

Counsel for the singer said she had gone into seclusion after receiving the decree and the German pianist was reported en route to Berlin, where Miss Talley met him last winter while touring Europe with her mother and sister.

The musicians were married six months ago at White Plains, N. Y., and drove in Miss Talley's motor car to Kansas City, where they lived for a time in the Walk-Up apartment, which had been the home of Miss Talley and her family prior to her marriage.

The rapidity with which the Kansas City schoolgirl rose to a place in the New York Metropolitan Opera Company was matched by the abruptness with which she abandoned her career.

Her early training as the member of a church choir was augmented by instruction in New York and in Italy. As a girl of 19, she made her debut at the Metropolitan as Gilda in Rigoletto in February, 1926.

Her appearance brought forth a variety of criticism, much of it favorable and much of it suggesting the need of further musical training and maturity in the singer.

Three years later Miss Talley abruptedly announced that she had retired as an opera singer and, in following years, repeatedly asserted she did not intend to return to opera.

Her appearance in opera had been interspersed with concert tours over the United States. Upon her retirement she returned to Kansas City and later bought a large wheat farm at Colby, Kan., to which she devoted considerable attention.

In an interview which followed her marriage, Miss Talley attributed to fate her sudden rise as a singer, her sudden retirement and her meeting with Raucheisen in his Berlin studio.

Whether she would return to opera, Miss Talley said, was something else for fate to decide.

Charwoman, Al Smith, Schoolmates, Meet

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP) A charwoman in the house office building met her old schoolmate, Alfred E. Smith, today for the first time in nigh onto 30 years.

Mrs. Delia McCoy Dineen heard about Smith being in conference with Representative Rayburn, of Texas, and timidly asked newspapermen if she had a chance to shake his hand. It was arranged.

"Why, hello, Delia," was Smith's greeting.

They recalled having attended St. James school in New York for about 10 years.

FORECLOSURE 'WAR' SPREADS IN WEST

er, leading a potential uprising in that direction, said tonight.

Gilberts, as president of the Wisconsin branch of the National Farm Holiday Association, is leading a movement which he said includes more than half the state's farmers.

Organization of this agrarian army, pledged to conduct a farm strike and withhold products from market if necessary to gain its objectives, is proceeding rapidly in Wisconsin and throughout agricultural states, Gilberts said, with more than 100,000 of Wisconsin's 180,000 farmers recruited.

"We always have contended that if we get the farmers organized and public sentiment back of us, there will be no need for calling a farm holiday," he said.

The association will push its legislative program vigorously, falling back upon its last economic threat only after state and federal legislators have spurned its demands, Gilberts said.

MORTGAGE SALES STOPPED IN MINNESOTA, NEBRASKA

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 28.—(UP) Farmers demanding relief from their debt burdens were active and successful in several instances today in Minnesota and Nebraska. Threats of violence and lynching marked the farmer "victories."

The most spectacular demonstration was at Madison, Minn., where 2,000 farmers, called by the Farmers' Holiday Association, shouted threats against mortgage holders until the sheriff, pinned in a chair, ordered three foreclosure sales postponed.

Another sheriff, admitting his fear of "lynching," mediated a dispute over a mechanic's lien at Granite Falls, Minn., and won agreement to a reduction in the amount a farmer owed for lumber.

Presence of between 400 and 500 determined but peaceable farmers was credited with failure of a mortgage foreclosure sale at Montevideo, Minn. The sale was postponed when no bids were offered.

One hundred friends of J. D. Williams, Pawnee City, Neb., farmer, were the only bidders at a live stock and farm equipment sale there. After buying the property for $8.05, they gave it back to the owner. The sale was on a note for $6,000.

The Minnesota demonstrations were in furtherance of the Farmers' Holiday Association's fight for an extension of farm mortgage moratoriums to this state.

The gathering at Madison began shortly after dawn. The farmers, in their best clothes, massed in the courthouse and on the lawn.

Led by John Bosch, Atwater, state president of the Farmers' Holiday Association, they jammed into Sheriff A. H. Smaagard's office, forcing him into a chair. He was unable to move. Bosch asked postponement of the sales.

"We aren't trying to repudiate our debts," Bosch shouted. "All we want is justice. We want our equity in our properties secured."

Other demonstrators shouted encouragement.

"You tell him, John," and "Kill the insurance companies," were some of the cries.

Smaagard announced "indefinite" postponement of sales of the farms of Kasper Westfield, 75; Thomas Faaberg and Bernt Olsen.

Sheriff Martin F. Fitzner, of Granite Falls, was caught between two fires when 250 friends of Ole Olson, Woodlake township farmer, accompanied him to the sheriff's office to protest against a mechanic's lien on Olson's property for a $150 lumber bill. The property was to have been sold.

C. M. Wilson, of the Interior Lumber Company, was adamant at first, but Fitzner's urgings finally persuaded him to agree to confer on a compromise. Then Fitzner won the farmers over to the plan.

Maureen O'Sullivan Now Under Scrutiny

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Maureen O'Sullivan, Irish actress, and John Farrow, film writer, headed a long list of film colony notables to come under the federal government's scrutiny today.

Murray W. Garsson, special assistant to the secretary of labor, said Miss O'Sullivan was being questioned concerning her permit to remain in the United States, and was being interrogated also in connection with deportation proceedings that might involve Farrow.

How to Lose Fat a Pound a Day on a Full Stomach

Do Just These Two Simple Things

Fat Melts Away

Science has made important discoveries in fat reduction. The average fat person can now rip off fat a pound a day—four to seven pounds every week!—on a full stomach, with never a hungry moment. Thus it is foolish now to stay fat.

This is what you do: Take a teaspoonful ordinary Jad Salts in a glass of water a half hour before breakfast every morning. This reduces moisture-weight instantly. Also cleanses the system of the waste matter and excess toxins that most fat people have, and banishes puffiness and bloat.

Then do this about eating. FILL YOUR STOMACH—eat your fill—of lean meats, vegetables like spinach, cauliflower, cabbage, tomatoes, etc., and lots of salads. Eat a lot. Eat all you can hold. Don't go hungry a minute! Cut down on butter, sweets and desserts, bread. Eat any fruit for dessert.

That's all you do. Fat seems to melt away. The coarse lines of overweight give way to the refined ones of slenderness. You lose as much as a pound a day. You feel better than for years. For in this treatment you achieve two important results. The Jad Salts clears your system of toxins. *The diet takes off fat with food that turns into energy instead of weight.

If you're tired of being embarrassed by fat, try this way. You'll be glad that you did. You can get Jad Salts, large or small size, at any drug store.

*Note particularly—Jad Salts is urged purely as a poison-banishing agent—not as a reducing. The change in food does the work.—(adv.)

FULTON WILL GIVE CHARITY $304,583

Amount Is Maximum County May Allocate. New Budget Prepared.

Fulton county will appropriate to charity in 1933 the maximum amount of money it can give under the law, it was announced Saturday by George F. Longino, chairman of the county commission, when he made public the 1933 county budget which is to be acted upon at a special meeting of the board at 2:30 o'clock Monday afternoon.

The amount to be given under the heading of charities and benevolences totals $304,583.32. This maximum is fixed by the law limiting this class of disbursement to one-fourth of the state ad valorem tax rate, which would be 1 1-4 mills. The amount includes $25,930 for the almshouse and Grady hospital is included in the list of institutions to be benefited.

The board will divide the amount into 12 monthly payments and at a special charities meeting to be held each month will invite all agencies receiving the benefit to appear before the board and present their needs and suggest how the money is to be apportioned.

The tentative 1933 budget as prepared by Respess & Respess, county auditors, will be presented for approval at the Monday meeting. The tentative sheet shows a reduction in operating expenses of $794,327.81 for 1933. The total disbursements for 1932 were $6,739,346.62, and the total estimated disbursements for 1933 will be $5,945,018.81.

The recent salary slashes have reduced the budget by a total of $370,734.26. The salary list for 1932 was $1,883,807.90, and the 1933 list will be $1,513,073.64.

The report of the auditors sets out that the estimates for 1933 result in a balanced budget both as to revenue and expense and as to cash receipts and cash disbursements.

In making the estimate for tax assessments for 1933 the auditors base their report on a drop in estimated assessed values of 15 per cent under 1932 and have estimated that there will be collected and paid to the treasurer from 1933 taxes, prior to December 31, 1933, 16 1-2 per cent. In 1932 there was collected prior to December 31, 66.31 per cent of the 1932 assessment.

EXPLANATION GIVEN FOR FOREIGN TAXATION

Instructions for substantiating credits for foreign taxes taken in federal income tax returns have been issued by the bureau of internal revenue in mimeographed form.

"In the audit of returns it is found that one of the chief obstacles to prompt and correct consideration of credits for foreign taxes is inability to interpret the evidence in the form of receipts, etc., submitted by the taxpayer in support of claims for credit for taxes paid or accrued to foreign countries," the bureau said.

"In some instances, the credits claimed are based on evidence furnished in a foreign language which is not accompanied by a certified translation, while in other classes the credit is not supported by such evidence as is required by the regulations."

Evidence furnished in the form of receipts, assessment notices and other foreign documents of an explanatory character should contain the information for determining the nature of the tax, date of its accrual, date of payment and the income upon which the tax is based, it was said.

New Statue-Title Game Offers Prize by Noted Artist

Dr. Joseph Klein, the sculptor, is shown with his statue. The statue has a title known only to the sculptor. Can your ingenuity figure out what it is? If you can, Dr. Klein will make a portrait bust of you.

Are you clever in originating titles? If you are, and can figure the correct title of the statue shown above, the sculptor, Dr. Joseph Klein, will make a portrait bust of you or any member of your family. Such portraits are valued at $1,000.

For this statue already has a title. It is known to no one but the sculptor. Written on a slip of paper, he placed it in a sealed envelope and left it with the title editor of The Constitution.

On February 8, when the contest closes, the envelope will be opened and the correct name will be announced.

Each contestant must submit a 100-word story telling why he thinks his title is correct. In the event more than one contestant produces the correct title, the prize will then be awarded on the excellence of the accompanying explanation.

Titles must be sent to the title editor of The Constitution.

As a suggestion to contestants, the sculptor has placed a key in one hand of the figure, and the steering wheel of a ship in the other.

The name of the statue is expressed in the posture and otherwise in the figure shown in the photograph and is a natural expression of the sculptor's work.

Anybody is eligible to enter the contest, whether or not a Constitution subscriber.

From time to time The Constitution will print other pictures of the statue showing different views and affording contestants fresh angles in their search for the title.

DRY LAW RETENTION MOVE IS LAUNCHED

Crusading movements to retain the Georgia prohibition laws last week were reported in various sections of the state and predictions were made by Dr. John H. Wood, of Winder, who is head of the Consolidated Forces for Prohibition in Georgia, that the movement will gain additional impetus during the days to come. County organization meetings have been held in several north Georgia counties.

Future activities will include an address by Bishop W. N. Ainsworth at Columbus at an early date, it was announced, along with a statement that the W. C. T. U. of Georgia will hold "a series of meetings touching every congressional district in the state during February and March."

Eight Army Planes To Greet Roosevelt

Adding to the air activity which began with Franklin D. Roosevelt's flight to the Chicago convention after his nomination, eight army planes from Candler field will go to Warm Springs at 10:30 o'clock this morning to greet the president-elect.

Since his flight to Chicago, air travel has figured much in the program of the Roosevelts.

The flight today has been authorized by Major General Edward L. King, fourth corps area commander, and will be under command of Major William L. Plummer, air corps reserve, of Atlanta. Air corps instructors and reserve officers in the Atlanta vicinity will pilot the planes.

DANIEL BONDSMEN SEEK INFORMATION

Ask Key To Furnish Report on "Any Actual Shortage."

Bondsmen for J. Ben Daniel, former city marshal, whose accounts show a discrepancy of about $57,000 on the basis of an audit of Ham Eidson & Company, Saturday tacitly declined to co-operate with the city in straightening out accounts of the office, but said any "shortage" should be reported to them.

Mayor James L. Key wrote a letter to the Metropolitan Casualty Insurance Company, of New York, which bonded Daniel for $10,000, seeking their aid in unraveling affairs of the department. The following letter from Boyd C. Moss, superintendent of claims, was filed formally with Key Saturday.

"We acknowledge receipt of yours of January 26 advising us of 'an apparent discrepancy' in the accounts of J. Ben Daniel.

"Should any actual shortage develop from the present apparent discrepency, you will, of course, advise us and furnish us with itemized statements of same.

HURT IN AUTO CRASH, J. H. RUSH UNIMPROVED

Condition of J. H. Rush, treasurer of the Georgia republican central committee, who was injured in an automobile accident near Petersburg, Va., Thursday, was reported unchanged Saturday by the committee offices in Atlanta. Mr. Rush received a fractured skull and serious internal injuries, and was taken to a Petersburg hospital for treatment.

According to advices received by republican officials in Atlanta, Mr. Rush was en route to Washington, D. C., when his car was struck by another vehicle. Wilson Williams, secretary to the committee, said their information came from Bob Rush, the injured man's son, who is a student at Duke University in Durham, N. C. Mr. Rush is a prominent lumber dealer at Lumber City in Telfair county, and has been treasurer of the state republican committee for several years.

HOUSE RESTRICTS DRY ENFORCEMENT

Measure Sent to Senate Carrying Only $8,440,000 for Next Year.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—New and binding restrictions on prohibition enforcement activities were given final approval today by the house which passed and sent to the senate a bill allowing only $8,440,000 for these activities next year.

Despite statements from high administration officials that the things it proposed to ban would handicap the enforcers of the law, the house left in the bill all the restrictions it had adopted yesterday.

These forbid the purchase of liquor as evidence, prevent pay for evidence, ban wire tapping and bar the employment of informers or under cover men.

The $8,440,000 carried for prohibition out of the $102,602,000 in the four-department bill compares with $10,250,000 appropriated for federal dry law work this year and $9,599,000 the budget asked for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1934.

Hardly had the house defeated a dry drive to remove the restrictions when senate leaders voiced their differing intentions.

Senator Sheppard, democrat, Texas, a leading prohibitionist, said he would appeal to the senate appropriations committee to restore the eliminated provision prohibiting wire tapping, buying of liquor for evidence and the hiring of informers. He added if the committee fails to heed his request he would take the fight to the senate floor.

On the other hand, Senator Blaine, republican, Wisconsin, said the reduction from $9,120,000 to $8,440,000 for prohibition enforcement in the $102,601,000 supply bill for the state, justice, commerce and labor departments, was "not enough."

Another prohibitionist, Senator Capper, republican, Kansas, said the amount left was "too low and would cripple the work" of enforcement.

Senator Bingham, republican, Connecticut, said the house action was "another evidence confirming the contentions of Attorney General Mitchell and various bar associations that whatever is to be done about prohibition repeal and modification "ought to be done at once."

Mitchell has advocated quick action on repeal to avert nullification of the 18th amendment through lack of enforcement. Bingham added, however, he would support the cut in the senate appropriations committee.

his chest, came out over his heart and lodged in the wall. Wads from the shell were found by the window.

A broken window pane and shattered glass both inside the house and outside, coupled with footprints beneath the window, led officers to the conclusion that McGee was fired at through the window. He lay directly in front of the window and shaving implements on the table near at hand indicated that he was on the point of shaving when shot down.

The room and the entire house were ransacked. McGee's pockets were turned inside out and the outside breast pocket of his coat was cut away and the lining of the garment ripped and torn. As no money was found in the house it is believed that McGee carried money sewed in the coat and that it was discovered by the slayer. Even the mattress of the bed was in disorder.

Lieutenant W. A. Wells, of county police, found a 12-gauge exploded shell in the yard. He said that bits of clothing were imbedded in the wall, carried there by the force of the charge.

The time of the murder was established by J. H. Woodruff, a neighbor, who told police he heard a shotgun fired at about 7 o'clock Thursday night, and by the fact that McGee failed to appear for his route Friday morning. As the trail of the slayer was "too cold" Saturday for bloodhounds to be put on the scent, the county police appealed to city detectives for fingerprint experts.

Residents in the Adamsville district stated that McGee was though' by many to carry a large sum of money, saved over the years, about his person or secreted in his home. They stated that two years ago a bandit concealed himself at McGee's home and after slugging him into unconsciousness robbed him. It was said in the office of the solicitor-general that a man was tried for this robbery but was acquitted.

The body was removed to the undertaking parlors of Awtry & Lowndes, where an inquest was held at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon. The jury reached the verdict that the "deceased came to his death by a shotgun wound through the back, striking the heart, fired by a party or parties unknown to the jury."

C. D. Bartlett, who discovered the body, and his son, C. D. Jr., were called as witnesses. Bartlett said he went to the McGee home when his son remarked Friday night that "Uncle Hamp wasn't on the jitney line this morning." He said he thought McGee might be ill.

J. H. Woodruff testified that he heard a gunshot at about 7 o'clock Thursday night. County Policeman L. C. Clay testified to the condition of the house and the position of the body and stated a negro woman also heard the shot. Dr. J. C. Blalock, county physician, testified that the shot was of a "cut shell" or fired at very close range, but that in either event death was instantaneous.

The taxi operator is survived by one brother, C. W. McGee, 76, retired farmer of Sewell road.

Funeral services will be held at the graveside in Greenwood cemetery at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon.

MYSTERY CLOAKS LEAS' ACTIVITIES

they had started in the direction of Knoxville.

It was the court clerk's understanding that the Leas were in custody.

Efforts to reach him by telephone tonight were futile as he lives about five miles from Jamestown and there was no phone nearby.

Tonight's developments deepened the mystery of the Leas' whereabouts.

Lea's Evening Tennessean, in its final edition, carried a headline across the top of the page that "Leas' Whereabouts Unknown," and his morning paper, in its first edition, said across eight columns: "Mystery Cloaks Leas' Whereabouts."

Both papers used press association stories, and the headlines were based on these.

North Carolina's formal demand for the Leas, who were convicted at Asheville of bank law violations, has not yet reached Nashville. Their counsel have asked Governor Hill McAlister to hold a hearing on the requisition and have pledged that their clients will not leave Tennessee in the meantime.

Two Boys Are Found Killed by Cave-In

YUKON, Okla., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Entombed by a cave-in of their sand playhouse, two farm boys were found dead by their parents, Mr. and Mrs. V. W. Gray, today. The Grays are tenants on a farm north of here.

The parents said the boys, Bennie, 15, and Paul, 13, failed to answer a dinner call Friday night, and did not come home. The parents were not alarmed because they often went to a neighbor's home to spend the night.

LILLY MUST RETURN SEIZED PROPERTY

them that there are some bigger crooks," Lilly said.

Wright, who is serving a liquor sentence, expressed himself as not entirely satisfied to recover the property under the agreement, but said that further steps will be up to his attorneys. The lawyers, William Schley Howard and W. Paul Carpenter, indicated that they will take further action before the grand jury, abandoning civil procedure for criminal investigation.

C. A. Matthews, DeKalb county commissioner, said Saturday night that he is "straddling the fence in this case" and that he has not decided yet what action, if any, he will take, but is waiting for further developments.

Courtroom Packed.

Again, as on two previous days, a crowd packed the courtroom to hear the charges being aired before Justices W. J. Langley and E. P. White, and frequent applause of statements detrimental to Chief Lilly moved John Wesley Weekes, of defense counsel, to register a vigorous protest that the proceedings were being conducted "with all the sanctity of the rules of evidence thrown to the winds."

"Justices of the peace," Justice White interrupted, "are not bound by the rules of evidence as other courts are, especially those of us who function in country districts. We have possibly let in some stuff that ought not to have been submitted, under strict rules, but our purpose is to find out what property belongs to this man (Wright) and whether it has been rightfully seized. We are not interested in the criminal end of this case. There will be another day for that."

A concurring opinion was voiced at this juncture by Justice Langley.

Solicitor, Attorney Clash.

Solicitor-General Smith's assumption of responsibility came in the midst of a clash between him and Howard, who had asked by what right the property had been removed from the Wright home and brought to the courthouse. Much of the property, previous evidence showed, had been in the home of Chief Lilly and some in the homes of other officers, at the time Wright's wife swore out the possessory warrant.

"I did this," Smith said in reply to Howard's question. "I take full responsibility. I am not answerable to this court and am not on trial now. I make no bones about it. If I run against bootleggers or thieves and think property has been stolen, and confiscation is necessary to preserve evidence to catch the criminal, I am going to order such confiscation and keep on doing it until somebody stops me.

Howard interposed:

"If you send a crew over to my house looking for a still in the basement and you confiscate any of my furniture, you'd better bring along an undertaker."

"Mr. Howard," Smith retorted, "your remarks are getting very personal. Our relations have been pleasant. I've never sent any officers to raid your place but if I should do so you may rest assured it will be legally done."

Says Lock Was Broken."

Smith, getting back to direct examination, said that he went to the Wright home after the raid with Chief Lilly to see if any evidence had been overlooked. He said that one of the reasons the property was moved out of the house was because a lock on the front door had been broken.

"What difference would it make," Howard inquired at that point, "if the stuff was lost to Mrs. Wright in the house or after it was removed to the courthouse and other places?"

"The plaintiff (Mrs. Wright)," Smith said, "told me she had gotten all her stuff.

"She was referring to wearing apparel only," Howard shot back.

Along with his explanation of having the property, which included shotguns, watches, fountain pens, pocket books, expensive tapestry and mirrors, Smith, referring to the Hartley raid when 13 100-pound sacks of sugar were taken by Chief Lilly and his men, said that he directed Special Investigator Johnnie Jones to take two sacks of the sugar to his house" so that the rats won't destroy it."

Trial Procedure Assailed.

Most of the Saturday session was taken up in extended argument between counsel over the admissibility of evidence and the form of procedure.

Defense Attorney Weekes, at one point, protested that the hearing was not a trial on a possessory warrant but "political persecution," and asked the court to rule out all evidence relating to the Wright property because it was not now in Chief Lilly's possession.

"It has been in Lilly's possession," Paul Carpenter, of Mrs. Wright's counsel, replied.

Howard came back into the argument.

"We are here to protect the people of this county against the chief of police. This seizure was in high-handed and ruthless disregard of the rights of citizens. He is just as guilty as if he had gone there in the dead of night."

Candler Defends Seizure.

Whether the property was confiscated or not, Lilly had a right to seize it, C. Murphy Candler Jr., another defense attorney, argued to the court.

"This is Mrs. Wright's case but she's not here. She seems to have been forgotten."

"Mrs. Wright is ill," Carpenter explained.

"In any event, this whole business is preposterous and asinine," Candler resumed. "Whether the officers took the property or not, they had a right to take it. Where property is used to conceal the real purpose of a business the law says it may be confiscated. Everything in this house was used for one purpose and the Wrights did not even live there."

No legal move to condemn the property for evidence had ever been made, Howard told the court.

"If it had been an honest seizure," he contended, "they would have made a legal move to confiscate it within the 10 days provided by the statute.

"More than that," Howard continued, "they don't come into court with clean hands. They have transferred an important witness out of this jurisdiction and I can tell who went to the prison commission and caused the transfer to be made."

Wright's Treatment Hit.

Howard also charged that "they" had caused clothing which Wright was entitled to wear by regulations governing good prison conduct taken away from him, put him in stripes and forced him to do work that made him sick.

Wright sent word to his attorneys, Howard said, to "let them have the property. If you don't, they're going to kill me."

A mistrial was asked in the case after Justice White had expressed his opinion with reference to rules of procedure. It was refused and Justice Langley said:

"We are going to let the evidence come in and let this man prove the ownership of the property if he can. Then we will pass on to the legality of procedure."

First Lady-Elect Meets Mrs. Hoover, Mrs. Garner During Capital Visit

By LORENA HICKOK.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—A school-teacher and a secretary, both fond of their jobs, got together in Washington today and talked over the problem of what to do about those jobs after March 4.

The teacher, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who earlier called alone and on foot at the White House, which is to be her home for the next four years, will have to give up her job March 1.

But she told Mrs. John N. Garner she saw no reason why the latter should not go right on being her husband's secretary even after he is vice president.

They met at the Mayflower hotel shortly before Mrs. Roosevelt walked to the White House to look over, at Mrs. Hoover's invitation, the second-floor rooms that the president and his family use as living quarters.

After a swift and uneventful walk, during which no one recognized her, Mrs. Roosevelt dodged through the traffic across Pennsylvania avenue and swung briskly up the long curved driveway to the executive mansion.

She stayed an hour, chatting with Mrs. Hoover, conferring with members of the White House staff, and inspecting the second floor, which she had not seen since she visited the place as a girl, while her uncle, Theodore Roosevelt, was president.

She left on foot, but picked up a taxicab at the corner, after glancing at her watch and discovering she was late for an appointment with Colonel U. S. Grant III, head of the governmental department that has charge of the White House and its furnishings. She had declined a White House automobile bearing the presidential seal which waited outside for her.

"Mrs. Garner told me," Mrs. Roosevelt said later, "that she had been her husband's secretary for 30 years. She said she loved the job and couldn't bear to give it up. She asked me what I thought, and I told her I saw no reason why she should. Nor do I."

Later Mrs. Garner said:

"We were of one opinion—that we couldn't cease to lead busy lives after March 4. She was charming—just as natural as a human being could be. Of course she was beseiged by people waiting, but we had 15 very lovely minutes together."

One of the first things Mrs. Roosevelt did after her arrival in Washington early this morning was to call up Mrs. Garner, whom she had never met.

"I expect to be through at the White House shortly after noon," she said, "and I thought that, if you are going to be at home, I might stop in and see you."

Mrs. Garner suggested that, instead, she stop in and see Mrs. Roosevelt, and she did before Mrs. Roosevelt left for the White House.

Mrs. Hoover had offered to send a White House car and an escort to the Mayflower for Mrs. Roosevelt, but Mrs. Roosevelt declined. She wanted to walk, she said.

G. O. P. TREASURER'S CONDITION IS "FAIR"

PETERSBURG, Va., Jan. 28.—(AP) Hospital attaches reported tonight that the condition of J. H. Rush, of Lumber City, Ga., treasurer of the Georgia state republican party, was fair.

Wife, Daughters Held In Death of Planter

ST. JOSEPH, La., Jan. 28.—(UP) The wife and two daughters of John A. Nowell, prominent Tensas parish planter, were held in separate jails today following his mysterious death last Wednesday.

Nowell's body was found in the kitchen of his home near Clayton, where his wife said he swooned and fell against the stove, cutting several gashes in his head.

Physicians performing an autopsy, however, declared the man died of ptomaine poisoning. His stomach was removed and sent to New Orleans for examination. A report was expected Sunday.

Nowell was owner of "Steep Bayou" plantation and carried life insurance amounting to $5,000, it was reported. Mrs. Nowell, who is 39, was held at Shreveport; the oldest daughter, Ruby, 20, at Alexandria, and Helen, 17, at Monroe.

Living Veteran Plans To Visit His Own Grave

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Frank Totino, a World War veteran, will sail for France Friday to look at his own grave.

According to war records, Totino was killed in the Battle of the Argonne. The war department, in checking his identity, sent him a picture of his grave in Flanders field. It even has his name on it.

Totino was wounded in the Battle of the Argonne and spent nearly a year in hospitals. In the meantime, one of his buddies was buried under Totino's name.

RAIL GROUP GETS DATA ON CARRIERS

tinue using the taxpayers' credit to save an already hopeless condition."

He emphasized the remark did not mean all railroads, but that many had borrowed "that can't hope to have their over-inflated capital structure maintained."

Hearings will begin Tuesday.

Smith announced the date of the forthcoming report after the conference with Rayburn. He declined to indicate what the recommendations would be.

"The sole and only purpose of our visit," he said, "is to get ideas and to check up on some things relative to a comprehensive report and plans in respect to the railroad situation and what can be done about it."

Approval Withheld.

Discussing the bankruptcy revision bill, he said that "while naturally in sympathy" with the measure's purpose he could not say whether the committee would approve of the bill "after it comes from the laundry," meaning when the house has finished amending it.

Smith also refrained from expressing an opinion on pending bills by Rayburn to place railroad holding companies and bus lines under I. C. C. regulation. Both plans will be dealt with in the report, he said.

The committee did not call on Couzens, chairman of the senate's interstate commerce committee, because his view already had been obtained by Baruch and the committee's time was limited. It assembled in Washington this morning, at Smith's hotel room, went directly to Rayburn's office and, after a lunch-time recess, met again with the interstate commerce commissioners. After this meeting the members separated, most of them heading for New York, where the next meeting will be held.

Mary Miles Minter Is Sued for $41,008

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Juliet Riley, known on the screen several years ago as Mary Miles Minter, has been named defendant in a suit for $41,008 filed in superior court by the Mortgage Guarantee Company and the Security First National Bank of Los Angeles, who say they hold a note given by her in 1929.

The suit says the note is secured by a trust deed covering Los Angeles real estate. When Miss Minter defaulted in payment of interest last April, foreclosure proceedings were begun and the property was sold. The note was for $75,000 and the proceeds of the real estate sale were not sufficient to satisfy the trust deed, said the complaint.

PROGRESSIVE BODY TO BE KEPT ALIVE

Group Plans Continued Efforts in Behalf of Liberal Legislation.

By D. HAROLD OLIVER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—An important move looking to the perpetuation of the progressive organization set up in the 1932 campaign primarily to elect Franklin D. Roosevelt and to work for liberal legislation was undertaken here today by nine senators.

After a conference at the capitol they appointed a subcommittee to investigate the prospects of a permanent and active group.

Senator Norris, Nebraska's republican independent and supporter of Alfred E. Smith and Roosevelt in the last two presidential races, called the meeting. He told the Associated Press afterward that the 1932 progressive set-up probably would be continued in hopes of achieving whatever liberal objectives are decided upon.

Six republican independents, two democrats and the farmer-labor senator, Shipstead, of Minnesota, took part in the conference. Also present was David K. Niles, of Boston, who was organization director of the National Progressive League, the official title of the organization under whose auspices many of the senators spoke in the 1932 campaign.

Tournament Schedule for Week.

Monday afternoon: Mrs. Elwin Clarke's tournament luncheon at the Tavern.

Monday evening: Mayfair Club's weekly pair tournament, being the first of a new series.

Tuesday afternoon: Mrs. Annie Adair Foster's regular weekly afternoon tournament at the Georgian Terrace.

Tuesday evening: Mrs. Emma McDaniel's weekly tournament.

Wednesday evening: Atlanta Bridge Club's weekly tournament.

Thursday morning: Mrs. Clarence Knowles' and Mrs. Carl Vretman's weekly morning tournament at the Cavendish Club.

Thursday evening: West End tournament at the West End Golf Club.

Friday afternoon: Atlanta Bridge Club's weekly individual tournament.

Friday evening: Cavendish Club's weekly tournament.

On March 1 the best bridge-playing talent in Georgia and surrounding commonwealths will assemble in Atlanta for the very laudable purpose of carrying back home some, or all, of the cups and trophies emblematic of bridge supremacy of this state.

All of which means that the Georgia state tournament, held the past two years in Augusta, will be held in Atlanta on March 1 to 4. These days come on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The Cavendish Club, which has been awarded the event by the American Bridge League, is making elaborate preparations to make the event the greatest bridge championship ever held in this state. Besides drawing every good and mediocre bridge player in Atlanta, the club will make every effort to bring leading bridge players from many other southern cities to match their skill against the local clan.

The entrance fee is extremely reasonable, considering that each event will be held in two sessions and that state titles carrying as handsome cups as were ever offered in this section are at stake. For any one event the entrance fee is $2. If one plays in the three, the price is $5. The charge for the individual championship, staged the final day and open only to the 25 players who have made the best showing in the three previous championships, will be announced later.

The Georgia state tournament for the past two years has had but two titles, the mixed team-of-four and the pair championships, down for decision. This year the mixed pair and the individual championships have been added. The make-up for pair and team-of-four combinations are exactly as the name of the event specifies. The pair championship can be competed for by two men or two women or a man and a woman. The mixed pair event calls for a man and a woman and the mixed team-of-four must have at least one man or one woman on it.

Much interest has already been aroused in local bridge circles over the coming state tournament and many of the brothers and sisters have already paired up and started intensive partnership play in preparation for the various events. Teams-of-four are also being organized. The management of the tournament wants it understood clearly that the tournament is an open affair and that any bridge player, whether a resident of Georgia or not, is eligible to compete. Entries should be addressed to the Cavendish Club, Cox Carlton hotel, Atlanta.

The past week rounds out about as strenuous a session of tournament play as the old town has ever seen. Yet on Friday evening when the stretch drive had been reached the brothers and sisters showed no signs of weakening but, if anything, exhibited an even greater keenness to play duplicate. All of which is as it should be, for, after all, duplicate is so far ahead of rubber bridge that there is no comparison.

Just to give you some idea of how the final stages of "the week of a thousand tournaments" gave its farewell gasps, it might be mentioned that on Friday evening the West End tournament, held at the West End Golf Club, had a 10-table tournament, while at the same time the regular weekly tournament at the Cavendish Club found nine tables in play. The conflict of dates did not seem to hold back the entry list, showing that Atlanta is big enough to have plenty of tournaments and get a different crowd for each.

The Cavendish event saw Mrs. Roy Wynn, long known in rubber bridge play but until recently a stranger to duplicate, paired with Henry Chanin, come galloping down the stretch to win by a nose from that newly formed combination of Mrs. Eugene Tarry and James Causey. Mrs. Wynn, according to Chanin, played a very fine game and their score of 90 points, about a 65 per cent game, gives the stamp of truth to his assertion. All of which brings out the old bridge adage that the highest form of praise is that bestowed upon you by your partner. From now on I hope the attractive Mrs. Wynn will not dodge tournament play. As for Henry the Cavendish Club could breathe a little easier if he decided to go to the movies on Fridays. For at the present time the said Henry has collected no less than three silver spoons, each spoon denoting one win at that popular club. Now it is all right to win spoons. But when one has accumulated six of them the club is forced to give some large, ornate, beautiful and handsome prize. Mrs. Humphrey Wagar and Mrs. George Black, managers of the Cavendish, were rather vague in announcing at the start of the spoon-giving era just what this prize would be, thinking that it would be many moons before one player would win six tournaments. But the fast pace Henry has set makes the outlook appear extremely gloomy.

As mentioned before, Mrs. Tarry and Causey were second. Their 89 was good enough to win nine out of ten Cavendish tournaments, but it was their luck to have the Wynn-Chanin combination run wild on this evening. In third place came Mrs. E. E. David and Sidney Smith, with 82 1-2 points.

Fourth place fell to a new combination in duplicate circles—Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Gottschaldt, whose 81 points was a very creditable showing for any pair and especially impressive when it was Allen's first pair tournament experience and the second for his wife.

The West End Golf Club was the scene of a very [illegible] double tournament Friday evening. Twelve tables were filled and when the last card had been played it was found that [illegible] had lost it was four [illegible] William, of the House of D[illegible] assisted by J. B. GERMAN, FRENCH GOVERNMENTS FALL

Over Seas

By BYRON DARNTON,
Associated Press Cable Editor.

All Europe seems to have its eyes on March 4, the day on which Franklin D. Roosevelt will become president of the United States.

The reason is that one of the primary interests of Europe right now is the war debts. And Mr. Roosevelt has indicated that he is willing to listen to the pleas of the debtor nations for a new deal.

Next to the announcement made by Secretary of State Stimson that the new administration would be open to another presentation of the war-debt issue, perhaps the most outstanding pronouncement made recently concerning the debts came from Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain, of Great Britain.

Last Tuesday night Mr. Chamberlain made a speech before an audience of Yorkshire businessmen at Leeds, one of England's great industrial cities which, as far back as 1373 was known for its woolens. In this address the chancellor remarked that Britain's debt policy had been unchanged since the Balfour note of 1922, despite the fact that in the meantime there have been alternate conservative and labor governments.

The Balfour note set forth the policy Britain would pursue toward her own debtors. It asserted that while the London government would have been willing to forego all claims for reparations and the repayment of the inter-allied debts, if such action had formed part of a universal settlement, it would be necessary for some measure of repayment to be made because Britain in turn had to pay the United States. But the Earl of Balfour made it clear that Britain would be content with a total sum from her allies and from Germany sufficient to cover her own payments to the United States, although this amounted to only about one-quarter of the amount due her.

The British government abandoned the policy of general cancellation with the greatest reluctance, the note said. It argued that the allied and associated powers were partners in the greatest international effort ever made in the cause of freedom and that they still were partners in dealing with some, at least, of its results.

"To generous minds," the note said, "it can never be agreeable, although for reason of state it may be necessary, to regard the monetary aspect of this great event as a thing apart, to be torn from its historical setting and be treated as no more than an ordinary commercial dealing between traders who borrow and capitalists who lend."

British policy under the present government remains much the same. Mr. Chamberlain told his Yorkshire hearers that total cancellation of war debts and reparations would be the best thing that could happen to the world. If that was too much to expect, he continued, Britain would gladly discuss the question with the United States with two points kept in mind—that the settlement resulting from those discussions must be final and that it must not involve resumption of German reparations which were virtually ended by the Lausanne accord.

Pope Pius' proclamation of the holy year has placed the Vatican back on the front pages of the Italian newspapers. The newspapers had an unwritten understanding with the government not to give prominence to Vatican news.

The reason for the change in policy was that it is estimated the holy year will bring to Rome thousands of pilgrims who will spend considerable money in Italy and on Italian boats.

While newspapers in America have gone to great expense in securing by cable a papal encyclical or a speech, Italian papers have given the same document three to four scanty paragraphs, always on an inside page.

The pope's observance of Christmas, Easter or his birthday, or a greeting to visitors or pilgrims either are ignored by the Italian newspapers or dismissed with a paragraph.

Rome papers have been more diffident to Vatican news than the journals of other Italian cities.

Now, however, the situation has changed. Full columns on the front page confront the reader, informing him of the history of holy years, the probable events of the jubilee year beginning April 2, the canonizations and beatifications to take place in those twelve months; describing the activities of previous popes during these holy periods; detailing the formation of Italian pilgrimages to Rome, and carrying messages from abroad applauding the pope's initiative.

The Italian tourist agency is advertising in the Vatican newspaper, Osservatore Romano, that it is ready to make arrangements for any pilgrimage to Rome from anywhere on earth.

ALABAMA AND OHIO GRANTED R. F. C. LOANS

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—The Reconstruction Corporation today voted $151,575 of emergency relief funds to Ohio and $56,915 to Alabama.

The money in both instances is to be used between January 16 and February 28.

The Alabama loan is for four counties, the names of which were withheld. In asking the loan, the Alabama governor said the four counties had been severely affected by the depression of farm prices and that state and local resources were inadequate. Alabama prior to this loan had received $1,478,807.

"Black Jackets" Seek Fascist-Ruled Japan

Kenzo Adachi (below), former member of the Japanese cabinet, has organized a fascist party in Japan. His chief lieutenant, Seigo Nakano, is in the center of the group. He wears the black jacket uniform and holds the party's banners. The flag bearing the eagle is that of the youth branch; the other, adorned with the symbol of the sun goddess, is the guidon of the main party.

By GLENN BABB.

TOKYO, Jan. 28.—(AP)—The "black jackets," Japan's newest political force, aspire to the same power and prestige here that Mussolini's black shirted followers have achieved in Italy and that Adolf Hitler demands for his brown shirts in Germany.

While some of the trappings of European fascism have only just arrived in Japan, the central idea of this political philosophy—intense nationalism—was practiced hereabouts long before the duce was born.

Now comes the "kokumin domei," or "national people's league," which is trying to capture leadership through the latest resurgence of that feeling, a tide which has been rising since events in China directed world attention to the empire's Asiatic policy.

The league has a uniform consisting of a Norfolk-type belted jacket of stiff black cloth, worn with black trousers which bear a thin white stripe. Sponsors of this uniform hope to make it as famous as the black and brown shirts of their European models.

The kokumin domei was formed by a group of nationalists who broke off last spring from the minseito, generally considered the more liberal of the two major parties.

The president of the league is Kenzo Adachi, a veteran political genius, who was minister of home affairs in the cabinet of the late Yuko Hamaguchi in 1929-31. His chief whip and driving force is Seigo Nakano, a voluble, dynamic individual.

The group holds 33 of the 466 seats in the national house of representatives, but its leaders predict much greater things.

"When we seceded from the minseito, we were a mere handful," said Mr. Nakano. "Today we have the support of thousands of voters and soon we shall overwhelm the nation with our numbers. We take pride in the fact that we have the youth of Japan back of us."

Like the fascists and the nazis, the kokumin domei has a separate youth organization to train its future leaders. Light brown banners have been adopted for both branches, the senior organization's showing the sacred mirror, an octagon with rays, symbol of the sun goddess.

GERMANS DEMAND RIGHT TO ARMIES TO GUARD BORDER

Present Situation, With France and Other Neighbor Nations Armed to Teeth, Is Held Intolerable for 'New' Nation.

LACK OF DISARMING SCORED IN BERLIN

Leaders Insist They Are Willing To Remain Almost Unarmed If Others Will Slash Forces.

(This is the second of a series of articles by Richard D. McMillan on why Europe will not disarm.)

By RICHARD D. McMILLAN.

BERLIN, Jan. 28.—(UP)—So long as France remains armed to the teeth, the most military nation in Europe today, Germany intends to insist upon the right of arming herself if need be "for defense."

This statement is the summing up of the conversations I have had with responsible German diplomats and other authorities, as well as with members of the Steel-Helmet and other organizations. The younger generation in Germany is particularly insistent upon this point.

"We did not make the last war," a young German student told me. "Even if it is accepted that Germany was guilty for plunging the world into the greatest carnage of all time—and we dispute this question of war guilt—we, the younger generation, were not responsible. Why, then, should we suffer the humiliation and indignity of our present situation?"

The leaders of the reich government, even Adolf Hitler, head of the German nazi party, deny that Germany actually wishes to rearm. What they wish is equality in principle with the other nations of the world.

Promise Collaboration.

"Grant us this and we will collaborate loyally with the rest of the world in bringing about equal disarmament amongst the nations," they said. "We do not wish another war, but we do not wish to pass another 10, 15 or 20 years with powerful military neighbors on either side—France, on the one hand, and Poland, on the other, with red Russia looming beyond in the background as a potential danger to our country."

The Germans further argue that they signed the Versailles treaty on the understanding that, once its conditions were fulfilled, the signatory nations would proceed to an all-round scaling down of their fighting forces and war implements. Instead of reducing arms, the Germans argue, Europe now is mightier in military strength than before 1914, with the principal nations pouring out their people's money at the rate of $2,000,000,000 a year for the purchase of war material and the maintenance of armed forces.

According to German statisticians, these $2,000,000,000 are divided up, partly as follows:

Great Britain (mainly for navy)	$555,521,000
France	475,000,000
Italy	237,345,000

These figures, based on the army, navy and air force estimates of the powers for 1930-1931, show that Germany's expenditure of slightly more than $120,000,000 is overshadowed by the military budgets of her neighbors.

The German case is that all this expenditure, which can only be a precursor to a general armament race, is needless. Germany disarmed, deprived of a navy above certain limits, without military aircraft, without tanks, with a restricted army, is a menace to no one. Why, then, not grant Germany equal rights with other nations and then proceed to a general whittling to the bone of armaments?

German Opinion.

Official spokesmen of the German government with whom I talked were emphatic in declaring that if equality of disarmament in Europe were agreed upon Germany would be content and would abide by the conventions under which this would be reached.

The attitude throughout the reich seems to be that, although Germany at the present moment has not the necessary finances to enable her to rearm, even if she wished to defy the clauses of the Versailles treaty, the time may not be long delayed when her treasury once again will be sufficiently filled to enable her to pay for tanks, machine guns and fighting planes. If the other nations of Europe do not bring their armaments down to Germany's level, then the German nation will remember that when the time of her economic and financial revival comes.

A tour through Germany quickly convinces that the nation, through its government leaders, is straining at the leash against the Versailles treaty and is striving to find allies to aid in bringing about revision of what the reich regards as a dagger at its heart.

British Interested.

In recent months, German diplomacy has made strides towards bringing Great Britain to her way of thinking. Ramsay MacDonald, the British premier, has been reported on more than one occasion to have pledged himself to support Germany's claim for equality of armaments.

There is no doubt that, if Germany's arms claim is agreed to and she obtains satisfaction on the "principle" of armaments equality, she will proceed to agitate for revision of the Versailles treaty, especially in so far as concerns the Polish corridor.

Well informed opinion in Germany already speaks freely of the time when the Versailles signatories will be called together to agree to revision of the treaty. A powerful argument with the Germans is that the sole survivor of the signatories of the treaty, David Lloyd George, war-time prime minister of England, definitely has declared that the idea in the minds of the framers of the treaty was that it should lead to early general disarmament.

Plain Folks Walk in Royal Halls As Spain Throws Open Its Palaces

National Palace, Madrid.

La Granja palace, showing portions of the gardens. Salon de Embajadores in Seville castle, Seville.

By THEODORE A. EDIGER,
Central Press Correspondent.

MADRID, Jan. 28.—Nine great Bourbon palaces in various parts of Spain—the dazzling interiors of which the public could formerly get at most a bare glimpse—have opened their doors at last. Now for a few pesetas visitors may wander at will through the maze of their seemingly never-ending halls and chambers.

These palaces today constitute Spain's greatest individual tourist attraction. The republic, much neglected to date by tourists in general, is planning to draw tourists through this monarchical heritage. A national patrimony commission was recently created to study the most advantageous disposition of old royal property.

The national palace in Madrid is the largest of Spain's royal palaces. Only two palaces of the western world—the Vatican and the Louvre—exceed this royal residence in size, it is said. It will be transformed into a permanent museum once the contemplated republican presidential palace is constructed. One section of the National palace has been placed at the disposal of President Alcala Zamora, and this section is still closed to the public.

The National palace, a massive late Renaissance edifice, was designed in 1764. Crowning the sheer cliff side above the Manzanares river, its hundreds of windows face the plains of New Castile. It is generally first viewed from across the circular Plaza de Oriente, for which Joseph Bonaparte pulled down 500 houses, a church and several convents 122 years ago.

This, one of the most magnificent palaces in the world, is a virtual treasure house, containing, in addition to its priceless jewels and relics, a collection of 500 of among the world's finest tapestries, the second largest library in the republic, an amazing armory and the archives of the crown.

The gorgeous rugs of the palace have been rolled up and fill a large storeroom, but otherwise the palace is much like it was the night Alfonso fled amid the hoots of the populace by a flight of stone steps under the Puerta Incognita (Unknown Door) leading down from a balcony to the green Campo de Moro. The throne in the great Sala de Embajadores, or throne room, has been roped off, but a good view is still afforded from beyond the dividing railing.

The exotically beautiful Alcazar de Sevilla (Seville castle), unique Mauretanian gem where the sultans of the Almoravides and the Almohades lived in all Moorish splendor until the Christians finally conquered the dusky invaders from Africa, was Alfonso's southern palace. This has been turned over to the city of Seville, which plans to transform it into a permanent museum.

The Alcazar was rebuilt in 1353 by King Pedro I of Castile—Pedro the Cruel—replacing many purely Moorish architectural features with less ornamental western influence, but leaving the palace unique because of its harmonious blend of the orient and the occident.

Of the many elegant chambers in the Alcazar the large Salon de Embajadores stands out, principally for its varied columns of marble and jasper, its richly inlaid doors bearing mysterious Arabic inscriptions, the beautifully mottled marble floor, and in general the mysterious and original harmonization in all artistic effects visible of five diverse styles—Arabic, Almohade, Granadine, Gothic and Renaissance.

Within a radius of 50 miles from the National palace in Madrid, and linked by good highways, there are four other palaces, those of La Granja, El Pardo, Arajeuz and Riofrio, as well as the one-time palace and monastery, El Escorial, where the royal burial ground, one of the most magnificent pantheons in the world, is situated.

The palace of La Granja, where the kings passed many of the hot summer months, will be transformed into a summer "White House" for the president, Alcala Zamora. La Granja is famous for its lavish gardens, which rival even those of Versailles, which they closely resemble.

The palace of El Pardo, only eight miles from Madrid, probably will be made a tapestry museum, for here are found the republic's most magnificent tapestries. All of the republic's royal tapestries—without doubt the greatest collection in existence—would stretch five miles if laid end to end.

At the beaches Alfonso maintained the Pedralves palace in Barcelona, which has been ceded to the University of Barcelona. Now it serves as a women's dormitory. For 300 pesetas, or approximately $24 a month, an American girl can reside and eat there while studying Spanish at the university. The girls eat out of dishes adorned with the royal crown and bathe in gorgeous marble bathrooms. And for the Spanish co-ed life here costs only $12 a month.

VON SCHLEICHER FORCED TO QUIT BY OPPOSITION

Berlin Cabinet Head's Resignation Comes After Governing Nation Only 56 Days; Adolf Hitler Contacted.

HERRIOT LOOMING AS FRENCH PREMIER

Daladier and Others Also Mentioned as Possible 'Strong Man' To Handle Parliamentary Crisis.

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER.

BERLIN, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Chancellor Kurt Von Schleicher, for almost a decade considered to be Germany's most clever player of political chess, today was checkmated by the opposition which he a few days ago described as political manipulators and resigned.

Former Chancellor Franz Von Papen, Nationalist Leader Alfred Hugenberg and National Socialist Leader Adolf Hitler, plus the East Prussian junkers and also certain big industrialists, persuaded President Von Hindenburg that General Von Schleicher was unable to master Germany's economic crisis and insisted that a stronger man must be placed at the helm.

With the dismissal of General Von Schleicher, President Von Hindenburg's conception of the constitution has become a pivotal question.

On one hand those who scorn parliamentarism try to convince him the country is in such a state of emergency that the fate of the people is more important than the letter of the constitution. On the other hand organized labor of all political shades solemnly adjures the president to "energetically oppose all underground efforts aiming at a coup d'etat and to insist upon a constitutional solution of the crisis."

The deposed Prussian premier, Otto Braun, even issued a public warning that a declaration of a state of national emergency would be tantamount to high treason.

Hitler Contacted.

Former Chancellor Von Papen, as the confidant of President Von Hindenburg, immediately started contacting Herr Hitler, Dr. Hugenberg and the centrists, but Wilhelmstrasse expects no definite developments before Monday.

General Von Schleicher, head of the twentieth cabinet since the birth of the German republic, resigned after governing the nation only 56 days. This was a shorter administration than any previous chancellor's with the exception of that of Prince Max Von Baden, head of the last imperial cabinet, who was swept away by the revolution after 30 days in the chancellorship.

General Von Schleicher resigned because the president refused to vest him with power to dissolve the reichstag. He interpreted this refusal as meaning that he no longer enjoyed the president's confidence, without which it would be impossible for him to rule in the face of a hostile reichstag.

Methods of Solution Offered.

In his interview with the president General Von Schleicher laid down three possible methods of solving the political crisis. First he suggested a government backed by a reichstag majority, which could be achieved only by making Herr Hitler chancellor. Second, he proposed a minority government resting upon "the broad stream of popular support," which also would necessitate a Hitler chancellorship with the toleration of the parties of the right. Third, he suggested the formation of a presidential cabinet vested with extraordinary powers and independent of political parties.

Hitler's national socialists have opposed General Von Schleicher on the theory that he was responsible for the president's failure to appoint the nazi chieftain to the chancellorship. The nationalists objected to him because of his program for dividing large eastern estates into small parcels as a method of meeting the unemployment problem. Industrialists felt that he deferred too much to agriculture. The centrists were filled with resentment because he overthrew the government of Dr. Heinrich Bruening last spring. Socialists and communists considered him reactionary.

Political commentators expected that if Herr Hitler could guarantee a stable government, with the support of the nationalists and at least the toleration of the centrists, he would have an opportunity to become the next chancellor. Failing that, they forecast the reappointment of Colonel Von Papen.

Hermann Goering, speaker of the reichstag, announced that he would not call the legislature into session Tuesday as scheduled but would wait until the cabinet crisis is over. The council of elders of the reichstag will meet Tuesday to discuss the program.

HERRIOT LOOMS AS PREMIER TO SUCCEED M. PAUL-BONCOUR

PARIS, Jan. 28.—(AP)—President Albert Lebrun is looking for a strong man to handle the delicate parliamentary situation resulting from the overthrow early today of Premier Joseph Paul-Boncour.

The powerful figure of former Premier Edouard Herriot looms as potential head of the government, although his strong attitude on the war debt momentarily appears to eliminate him.

A certain amount of receptivity, however, was indicated in his statement to the Associated Press relative to the possibility of his forming a cabinet. "It is too early," he said. "The lines are not clearly drawn." It was M. Herriot who was overthrown because he insisted that France make the debt payment to the United States December 15.

Not only is the chamber of deputies upset because of a split in the left majority, resulting in a socialist defection, but there have been numerous disorderly demonstrations against heavier financial burdens. The latest was a manifestation of taxpayers who shouted in the boulevards: "No more taxes!"

M. Paul-Boncour, who had ruled only 40 days, was defeated, 390 to 193, early this morning on the taxation issue.

NEW TARIFF VOTE ASSURED IN HOUSE

Republicans Force Ballot on Committee Discharge February 13.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Tossed forcibly into the closing weeks of the lame-duck congress today was a tariff issue that administration republicans plucked from the embers of the 1932 campaign in an effort to turn foreign nations toward exchange stability.

Resorting to the drastic discharge petition after democrats had bottled up the plan in committee, house republicans today insured a vote February 13, on legislation to increase import duties against nations with depreciated currencies.

Meanwhile, the senate adopted a resolution by Costigan, Colorado democrat, calling upon the tariff commission and other governmental agencies to supply all the tariff information that might be helpful to the incoming administration in bargaining with other nations for reciprocal import duties. A second measure also approved asked the commission for an analysis of foreign trade.

Both were adopted without debate or roll-call votes, but Senator Reed, republican, Pennsylvania, announced he was opposed to them, although he gave no reasons.

Administration spokesmen have labeled the plan to increase import duties against nations with depreciated currencies a powerful whip in the hands of this government during coming debt discussions and the world economic conference. Sponsors declare it will induce leading commercial nations to return to a gold standard.

Though intended to deal only with tariff problems born of cheapened money, the legislation embraces indirectly the issue of the Hawley-Smoot tariff which raged between President Hoover and President-elect Roosevelt.

It is constructed on the principle this government should maintain the protection intended when the 1930 act was written, a tariff wall democrats have assailed as too high. Acting accordingly, they had refused to let such a bill out of the democratically-controlled ways and means committee.

But Representative Schafer, republican, Wisconsin, filed a discharge petition. The White House indicated such action may be necessary if foreign exchange was not stabilized. House republicans conferred and unanimously voted to support the movement.

Today the necessary 145 signatures were obtained and a vote on discharging the ways and means committee will be taken Monday, February 13. A majority vote then will place the bill before the house for consideration.

The measure petitioned is, by Representative Crowther, republican, New York. It would make the tariff increases automatic in a ratio based on the percentage of depreciation of the currency.

"It levies a countervailing surtax," Crowther explained today, "so that we will collect in duties exactly what we intended to collect when we wrote the tariff act of 1930."

Contract Awarded.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Thirty-one contracts calling for an expenditure of $5,442,000 in connection with rivers and harbors work in various parts of the country were announced today by the war department.

WALES IS LEADER IN RELIEF PLANS

Britain Launches New Attack on Perennial Problem of Idle.

By HERBERT MOORE.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—(UP)—Led by the Prince of Wales and Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, a nation-wide mobilization of voluntary effort to help Britain's 2,000,000 unemployed and their dependents through this winter, is under way throughout Britain, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Behind this gigantic effort, in which leaders of all political parties, churches of all denominations and all kinds of social service are co-operating, is the growing realization that the dole and poor law relief are not enough. It is freely acknowledged to be the worst winter the British jobless have had in over a decade.

The Prince of Wales, just back from a personal tour of the distressed areas, has called upon his countrymen to do their bit in helping to make unemployed neighbors and friends more comfortable. The prime minister has appealed for voluntary support of the various recreational and instructional centers.

As a consequence of these impressive appeals, the general public is awakening to the need for more private and voluntary schemes.

Physical and mental rehabilitation now is the predominant idea in this new drive for more adequate unemployment relief measures. The government has given $50,000 to help private voluntary schemes. Funds are being collected in many places for various schemes. In all big cities novel experiments are being made which confirm the oft-repeated claim that Britain leads the rest of the world in unemployment relief.

The Prince of Wales has given another indication of the interest he takes in the work of industrial welfare by placing a house on his Kensington estate at the disposal of the Personal Service League. The work of this league is to collect and provide clothing for the unemployed of Lambeth, of whom there are more than 11,000.

A scheme to help funds for unemployed, which has the support of the bishop of London, the dean of Windsor, Lady Astor, and Sir John and Lady Simon, was launched at the Fortune theater in London, during the Christmas season. Garland Anderson's "Appearances" was revived and the author presented the play free of royalties. All profits to aid the jobless. Many other authors have agreed to allow their plays to be presented free of royalties.

Every day some new relief scheme is brought to light and regularly over the radio there is being broadcast a description of some of the most successful of these plans for the benefit of other cities and towns who are adopting relief programs of their own.

Mrs. Belmont's Funeral Conducted in Paris

PARIS, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Funeral services were held at the American cathedral today for Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, who died on Thursday after a long illness. The body will be taken to America for burial.

RUSSIA DECLARES JAPANESE UNFAIR

Soviet Expresses Dissatisfaction With Present Policy of Japan.

MOSCOW, Jan. 28.—(UP)—Dissatisfaction approaching irritation was expressed in high soviet quarters today with the present policy in Japan toward soviet Russia.

Officials characterized the Japanese attitude as unfair and provocative.

Despite protests through the soviet embassy in Tokyo they asserted Japanese newspapers continued to publish "inventions," which it was openly charged originated in the Japanese war office, relating to a purported "secret alliance between Russia and China against Japan.

Officials in Moscow were particularly incensed at the statement by the Japanese minister of war, Sadao Araki, declaring recent developments in Russia indicated soviet leaders either expected a Japanese attack or intended to attack Japan.

The Russians merely asked a careful study be made of the recent speeches of soviet leaders as proof they had no intention of attacking Japan, or any other nation, although ready to defend their territory if attacked.

Officials cited a speech of Josef Stalin's some years ago in which the dictator said: "We don't want a foot of foreign soil, but we will not yield an inch of our own." Stalin, in a recent speech, said the soviet union, however, had been obliged to build up its war industries because of the danger of foreign attack.

The fact Moscow wants peace was declared borne out by Premier Vitacheslav Molotoff in another of the series of speeches on "war preparations" made by soviet chiefs recently.

Molotoff insisted Russia would adhere to a policy of peace, and hoped that Japan's refusal to sign a pact of non-aggression was only temporary.

The speech of the war commissar, Klementi Voroshiloff, which followed these addresses by Stalin and Molotoff, was described as opposed to war, but it was admitted he declared the soviet union could not exist one day without its well-equipped army to defend it.

The soviet authorities, in these discussions among themselves, also pointed out Russia has maintaind a consistent policy looking to the signing of non-aggression pacts with all her neighbors.

Soviet Places Order For $15,000,000 Steel

BERLIN, Jan. 28.—(AP)—A $15,000,000 order for steel piping machines, drilling machinery and steel sheets has been placed by the soviet government with various German firms.

The German government is guaranteeing payment on the basis of a $75,000,000 credit guarantee set aside for Russian trade.

"ATTACK" BLAMED BY FORD FOR HALT

covered over with ashes. One way or another our plants will be going again full tilt in a very short time."

Early Reopening Seen.

Other Ford officials said today that if the body workers at the Briggs Manufacturing Company's plants return to work or the plants get into operation with other help by next Tuesday, the Ford factories will reopen as soon thereafter as a flow of automobile bodies is established.

While an official statement to that effect was lacking, it was intimated consideration had been given to the possibility the Ford company might prepare to make its own bodies if necessary. All the dies now used by the Briggs company at the Highland Park plant are owned by the Ford company.

Earlier today, Ford officials had said their factories would reopen "within six hours" after a resumption of work by the Briggs plants. They indicated their belief an adjustment would be reached by Monday.

Statement Stirs Black.

Ford's statement in a telephone conversation with London regarding "certain competitors" drew comment in Washington today. Senator Black, democrat, Alabama, said the Ford charge was "quite a coincidence" in view of assertions before a senate judiciary subcommittee yesterday that eight New York commercial banks had virtually complete control of the nation's industries through interlocking directorates.

Still the motor magnate and his assistants declined to amplify or reply in any manner other than to state that Ford's London conversation was "substantially correct." (Associates last night said Mr. Ford told them informally the London statement quoting him as saying "the actual truth is that certain bankers are trying to obtain control of the Ford concern" were "not exactly correct.")

At the Briggs plant today, police said the strikers were wavering between a desire to return to work by Monday noon, when the Briggs Company said it would begin hiring generally and holding to demands of their leaders that the company recognize shop committees set up by the strikers. State police guarded the plants, and reported no disorder. Forty men returned to work this morning, a dwindling line of picketers jeering them but making no effort to restrain them.

Basic Rate Guaranteed.

Briggs officials said they considered their guarantee to the workers of a base rate of pay, with abolishment of "dead time" deductions when material was not available for work, were sufficient. They said they would conduct no more negotiations with the men.

"The jobs are there if they want to come and get them," H. A. Hund, general manager of the Briggs Company said. "We will hold them until Monday noon; then we will hire generally."

Previous to the suspension, about 40,000 employes had been working mainly three days a week in the Ford plant. Officials said approximately 60,000 others were affected in plants outside Detroit when the Briggs Company was unable to furnish bodies.

Several other automobile factories whose bodies are furnished by the Briggs concern reported a surplus on hand sufficient to carry them into next week.

The Briggs Company planned to keep its employment offices open on Sunday for all former employes who wished to return.

STATEMENT STIRS BLACK TO ACTION IN CONGRESS

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—The word of Henry Ford as to causes of the strike in another plant which is tying up his operations was seized upon today by Senator Black, of Alabama, to launch a drive for investigating the charge that a few banks have a strangle-hold on American industry through interlocking directorates.

Ford was quoted in an interview obtained in London by trans-Atlantic telephone as saying that some competitors and bankers were responsible for the strikes. His associates said this was substatially correct.

Black read the story to the senate, saying it was quite a coincidence that this should be disclosed when a senate committee had just been told by a labor representative about the New York bank control. Afterwards Black told newspapermen a thorough inquiry should be held. He thought Senator Norbeck's stock exchange investigation should handle it or else that the house banking committee should get after the subject in connection with the Glass banking bill now before it.

His own judiciary subcommittee, which heard the charge in hearings on Black's six-hour day, five-day week bill, is going to hear more next Tuesday.

Black, thoroughly aroused, at the same time said that anyone thinking the hearings on his bill were "only to produce evidence" was all wrong and that there would be action on it.

Black said he believed his bill could pass at this session. He said only two witnesses had opposed the bill. "One," he added, "was a communist who wants to destroy the capitalistic system, and the other a representative of the Manufacturers' Association which wants to dominate the laboring man."

IRELAND ELECTS EAMON DE VALERA

Former Teacher Free To Carry Out Policies Against England.

Having won a total of 76 seats in the new dail, the president's party, the fianna fail, will be able to tie the combined strength of all other parties and then, if another vote is needed to break a deadlock, will have that of the speaker.

Cut Asked in Ranks Of Texas Rangers

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 28.—(UP)—Government economy today left holes in the ranks of the Texas rangers, the nation's oldest and most picturesque constabulary. A bill now before the state legislature would reduce the personnel to one headquarters company, a captain, a sergeant, and four men.

Old-timers of Texas read with a pang of regret of the disintegration of the ranger forces.

"One riot, one ranger," they once said of these hard-riding, quick-shooting men of the southwest.

But in the last few years the force has fallen upon evil days and now, those who would abolish the force claim the headquarters patrol doesn't know how to chase a bandit or killer, but spends most of its time shaking hands at conventions.

SEN. BRATTON ASKS LONG TERM CREDIT FOR CATTLEMEN

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Authority for the Reconstruction Corporation to make loans to live stock men through its agricultural credit corporations for periods up to 10 years, was asked today in a bill by Senator Bratton, democrat, New Mexico.

The loans could be amortized over the 10-year period in installment fashion.

Bratton explained to newspapermen such procedure would be of great help to western cattlemen, who would be able to get longer-termed credit instead of functioning under the existing credit arrangements of six months to a year.

"It would stabilize the live stock industry very much," he said, "and I think it would be of a great help to them. It would put the live stock producer on a basis similar to that of farmers who deal through federal land banks and help to alleviate strained conditions."

He intends to press for early consideration.

Negro Girl Who Sketched Picture Of Bobby Jones to Graduate Soon

When Bobby Jones' full-page picture appeared in the Sunday, June 29, 1930, rotogravure of The Atlanta Constitution as a tribute to the Atlantan's prowess in winning the three major golf titles of the world, it proved a source of inspiration to Rosa Beatrice Stafford, 19-year-old negro girl, of 9 Murray street, S. E. Her race was synonymous with song and rhythm. It had taken the wail of night wind in the cypress swamp and interpreted it into the moaning complaint of a song—the blues. It could find rhythm in anything—even religion.

But Rosa believed herself endowed with talents other than just song and rhythm. She could draw. She knew that, for since she was 9 she had been continually complimented on her sketches and water colors.

So two years ago she set to work with a crow quill pen, a bottle of ink, and plenty of keen determination, and began to reproduce the likeness of Bobby Jones, Atlanta's pride.

It was hard work at first—discouraging—but with her father, who is something of an artist himself, ever near at hand, criticizing here and praising there, results soon began to show, so when fall came 'round Rosa entered the picture in the art exhibit of the Southeastern Fair, along with a drawing of her father's. It took first prize

With renewed enthusiasm she continued the work and a short time ago finished the picture. Now her greatest desire is to have someone appreciate the real value of the portrait, for Rosa will be graduated from the Booker T. Washington Junior High school on February 27, and her father lacks the means to allow her to continue her education.

BOBBY JONES.
Drawn by Rosa Beatrice Stafford.

License Tags, Fund Diversion Face Legislature This Week

Sales Tax, Probe of Farm Post "Job Selling" Also in Hopper of Assembly for Action in Few Days.

By L. A. FARRELL.

Its preliminaries completed, the legislature on Monday will begin its second full week of the regular biennial session with leaders confident that all major problems will be taken up separately in the order of their importance, studied thoroughly and disposed of in their turn in order that there will not be the usual last-minute jamming of business.

Leaders have mapped the following agenda which will be followed as religiously as possible:

First: The administration-sponsored proposal for a cheaper automobile license tag. To this end the house already has passed a bill providing for tags at prices ranging between $3 for small cars to $15 for large cars.

Second: Decision on a proposal to eliminate the present veterinary division of the department of agriculture and place the division directly under the commissioner of agriculture. A bill carrying out this program already has been given the approval of the committee of agriculture of the house and will occupy the center of attention on the floor this week.

Action on Diversion.

Third: Action on various proposals to divert funds of the highway department to pay past due and contracted for appropriations of the state departments and agencies. Several bills to effect this now are in committees of both house and senate.

Fourth: Settlement of the sales tax question. The speaker of the house and leaders in the senate already have gone on record in favor of a sales tax to eliminate the ad valorem taxes for schools. It is expected that the house ways and means committee, in the final analysis, will write the sales tax bill the legislature will be asked to pass.

Fifth: Proposed reorganization of the highway department, to increase the membership of the highway commission and place the department under direct control of the governor. This is an administration measure. Bills to carry out the program are ready for introduction in both houses when Governor Eugene Talmade gives the word.

Senate to Probe "Selling."

One matter will occupy the immediate attention of the senate and probably of the house. It is the resolution offered Thursday by Senator J. T. Sisk, of Elberton, providing for a legislative investigation into rumors of alleged job selling in the department of agriculture.

Senator Sisk, in offering the resolution, said that it was being presented merely because he felt that the rumors either should be quieted or some action taken. Under the senate rules, the resolution having laid on the table for at least one day, now becomes privileged and it is expected that action upon it will be taken the first thing Monday morning.

Commissioner of Agriculture G. Claude Adams, who was out of the city Thursday when the resolution was introduced, has returned to the city and announced that he welcomes the investigation. A statement issued in his behalf by his office Thursday said that he had been approached by persons seeking to buy a job but denied that any jobs had been sold.

Senate Opposition Seen.

Despite the fact that the house chose a $3 to $15 sliding scale for auto tags, an effort will be made in the senate to amend the house bill to provide for the flat $3 rate, Senator Sisk said Saturday.

"Despite the house action I'm still convinced the tags for all cars should be $3,'" the senator said. "I am going to move for that in the senate at the proper time."

The house is expected to go into the bill proposing abolition of the present veterinary division. This bill also has the support of Governor Talmadge. During his tenure of office as commissioner of agriculture he had considerable difficulty with the veterinarian, Dr. J. M. Sutton, and made abolition of the division and incorporation of its work a part of the agricultural department one of the major issues of his gubernatorial campaign.

Diversion Predicted.

What will be done about diversion remains to be determined. There is a growing feeling that enough of the highway department's funds for a period of three or four years will be diverted to pay the unpaid appropriations but there also is considerable opposition to the proposal and a warm contest is in prospect.

The sales tax plan is meeting with determined opposition on the part of merchants over the state. A sales tax bill is now with the committee on ways and means of the house and Chairman John Spivey of that body has set the matter for a public hearing for a week from Tuesday.

The sponsors of the sales tax are insistent that they will support the plan only if it brings about abolition or practical abolition of the ad valorem taxes for schools, not only as far as the state is concerned but the counties and school districts as well.

Highway Reorganization Seen.

Reorganization of the highway department is desired by Governor Talmadge and also by residents of areas in which there has been little or no road building under the present commission. However, it is expected that the other matters will be disposed of first and that the reorganization bill will not be taken up for several weeks.

Keen interest was displayed Saturday in the hearing Tuesday night at the Winecoff hotel on the house bill to modify the state bone dry law so as to permit 3.2 beer. The bill is sponsored by Representative J. W. Cartledge, of Richmond county, and is now with the house temperance committee.

Mayor James L. Key, of Atlanta; Mrs. William T. Healey, state chairman of the Woman's Organization for National Prohibition Reform, and Reuben Arnold, well-known lawyer, will appear before the committee in support of the bill, while it is expected to be opposed by Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, Macon dry leader, and Dr. C. O. Jones, of Atlanta, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League.

Seeks Lieutenant Governor.

After disposing of the Sisk resolution the senate is expected to take up Monday the bill by Senator Joe Ben Jackson, of Gray, providing for the election of a lieutenant governor of Georgia. There has been considerable agitation at recent meetings of the assembly for such an office but a bill providing it has never been adopted, though as far back as 1911 it was urged, the records revealing that the first effort to obtain a lieutenant governor for the state was made by Representative Walter McElreath, of Fulton county in that year.

The Jackson bill already has been approved by the senate committee on constitutional amendments, and Senator W. M. Lester, of Augusta, has announced that he will make a strong fight for it on the floor of the senate.

Senate interest also is being displayed in several bills by Senator J. C. Cail affecting public utilities. One of these bills would make it unlawful for the public service commission to fix the value of public utility properties for rate making purposes on any other valuation than that on which taxes are paid. The senator said Saturday the effect of the bill either would be increase in the taxes of the utilities or a lowering of their rates.

Another bill by Senator Cail will take from the public service commission and place with the city councils, in cities of more than 50,000, the regulation of street car companies.

In a public statement Saturday, Senator Cail said he believed these bills were just and needed and added that he believed he had the support of a large number of members of both houses and that the bills would be adopted.

Downpour To Follow Cold Blast Today

Near freezing weather to be followed by cloudiness and rain is forecast for Atlanta today by George Mindling, United States meterologist. The mercury will be down to "near 32 degrees" this morning, he says, accompanied by frost, but the temperature will rise during the day and rain will set in during the afternoon and night.

Though frost was predicted for Saturday morning, none was recorded here, due to the brisk winds. The lowest temperature was 33 degrees and the maximum was about 40 degrees. Some frost was recorded Saturday in northern Florida. The mercury, after dropping close to 32 degrees this morning, will begin to rise slowly until it gets warm enough for the cloudy skies to rain, said Mr. Mindling. Today's maximum should be close to 50 degrees.

This morning will see the worst of the cold snap pass, he asserted Saturday, and the wind will die down. The outlook for the week indicates more rain for Monday and Tuesday with slowly rising temperatures and still more rain Thursday and Friday. The prospect, however, is for much colder weather at the end of the week.

Man Is Found Slain, Aged Woman Slugged

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Gang vengeance was believed tonight by police to have been the motive for the slaying of a 32-year-old chauffeur and a hammer attack on a 60-year-old woman, whose bodies were found within a short distance of each other along a lonely Queens road.

The body of the man, Vincent Fantasia, who had been arrested five times, once in connection with a murder, was found last night by a patrolman. The chauffeur had been shot three times in the back.

Three hours later a motorist spied the unconscious form of the gray-haired woman. She was taken to a hospital. Surgeons said she had a fractured skull. She regained consciousness for a short time but insistently refused to identify herself and tell how she had been beaten.

One police theory was that the woman may have been a witness to the gang attack on Fantasia and that the slayers had attempted to kill her to prevent her from identifying them.

U. S. OFFICIAL HURT WHEN PLANE CRASHES

SEBRING, Fla., Jan. 28.—(AP)—J. R. Puckett, an inspector for the aviation division of the department of commerce, crashed his amphibian plane in a grove at De Soto City, near here today.

Puckett was taken to a hospital here to determine the extent of his injuries, which were not believed to be serious.

Three Faiths Unite For Business Tribunal

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Three faiths—Protestant, Catholic and Jewish—have set up in Cleveland an organization to focus religion in the practical solution of such depression problems as social disorders and labor disputes.

The inter-faith commission is described by Rabbi Barnett R. Brickner, one of the sponsors, as the first movement in America in which the three religions have joined to give a concrete answer to the question, "What does religion propose to do about the present social crisis?"

Composed of 18 outstanding ecclesiastics and laymen, including Newton D. Baker, former secretary of war, the commission proposes to act as a court of arbitration where its services are requested in labor disputes and in a wide variety of cases arising in which there is evidence of social strife or maladjustment.

Cuban Officials Seize Copies of U.S. Magazine

HAVANA, Cuba, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Acting on orders from military censors, police today seized 140 copies of a recent edition of an American magazine (Time) from the Havana distributor.

Two weeks ago copies of the same publication were seized, but almost simultaneously Secretary of State Ferrara told newspapermen that censorship on United States publications was "an error," that the seizure occurred because orders were misunderstood, and that no further interference would be permitted.

"We have definite orders not to interfere with newspapers but to examine all magazines," an official at army headquarters told the Associated Press.

The magazines were destroyed today but censors thoughtfully removed the covers and returned them to the distributor, presumably so that he could be credited with the confiscated copies.

ALLOTMENT BILL DRAWS CRITICISM OF FARM LEADERS

"I can truthfully say the farmer is in no mood to be trifled with or experimented on."

Inflation Urged.

He advocated currency inflation, refinancing of home mortgages at 2 1-2 per cent, and government economy.

Chairman McNary, republican, Oregon, asked him whether he had any connection with the packers and he replied emphatically in the negative.

The same question was asked by McNary of George Van Orman Stuart, Hartland, Wis., who described himself as a farmer and live stock commission merchant.

"No, only as one who sells them live stock," the witness replied.

Under the bill, a tax would be levied on the packer of hogs, and the processor of the six other products selected, so that a bounty could be paid to the producer who cut his production 20 per cent. The bounty would be paid only on the share which enters into domestic consumption.

Other Provisions.

Besides hogs, the bill deals with wheat, cotton, tobacco, rice, peanuts and dairy products. Members of the committee are seriously considering reducing this number. Chairman McNary today asked one of the witnesses—Clarence Poe, Raleigh, N. C., publisher of The Progressive Farmer—what he thought of confining it to cotton and wheat.

"I think it might be justified, because it's a new measure involving an untried policy, to try it out on cotton and wheat for a year or two," Poe replied.

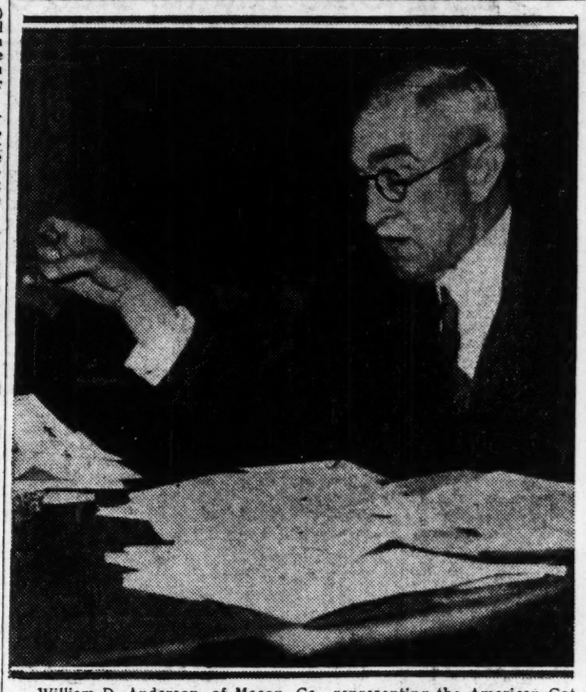

Acreage reduction provisions of the bill were the particular target of J. T. Sanders, Stillwater, Okla., head of the department of agricultural economics of Oklahoma Agricultural College.

"If you think the stabilization efforts of the farm board, or prohibition, are unpopular, just try to enforce this thing on the American farmer," he said.

Stuart said the bill would be "dangerous," resulting in a "tremendous surplus" and "the complete breakdown of our cash market for hogs."

Both Wood and Stuart contended the increased price of pork would lead the public to use other meats, thus affecting the hog raiser adversely.

Attacking New Farm Bill

William D. Anderson, of Macon, Ga., representing the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association told the senate agriculture committee the proposed domestic allotment plan would ruin the cotton business, its employes, and lead to a gigantic consumers' strike by acting as a giant sales tax on cotton clothing. Wintry Storm Lashes Coast, Delays, Damages Shipping

By OTIS PEABODY SWIFT.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—(UP)—A mid-winter storm spread havoc along the Atlantic seaboard today, endangering small craft and delaying big trans-Atlantic liners.

From Cape Charles to Halifax came stories of maritime disaster, storm-tossed ships and missing craft and damage to coastal cities.

One freighter was disabled at sea, three scows and two lifeboats, carrying a woman and seven men, were missing and unaccounted for, high tides flooded sections of New York and Boston waterfronts and incoming European liners hove to or slowed down to ride out the gale.

Early in the day the storm centered on Boston and Massachusetts coastal towns. Flood tides at Revere drove hundreds from beach homes. The Red Cross hastily provided cots and blankets for refugees. Five cottages, undermined, fell into the sea on Cape Cod. The Nantucket lightship was reported far off position. Cellars of 350 houses were flooded at Winthrop and Revere, Mass. The highway between Lynn and Nahant was flooded, cutting off the latter city, where 600 telephones were out of commission. At Lynn a $100,000 scow was blown from its mooring and could not be located.

Meanwhile, the Norfolk (Va.) radio station had asked craft in the vicinity of Cape Charles to search for seven men and a woman who, in two lifeboats, had abandoned a barge which had broken away from its tow. At Halifax, N. S., the east coast radio reported the disabled British steamer City of Delhi helpless off Sable Island at dawn, her propellor gone and her sister ship, City of Lille, standing by. Seven steamers were held at sea outside Halifax awaiting abatement of a gale which had damaged wharves and other waterfront property all along the Nova Scotia coast.

Ordering northwest storm warnings displayed from Atlantic City, N. J., to New Haven, Conn., the United States weather bureau at Washington reported "a disturbance of wide extent and great intensity," centering about 300 miles south of Halifax.

The tug Anamony and the barge Anastasia were missing somewhere off the Delaware capes, while the liner Norwalk, from Newport News, Va., landed a woman and five men at New York after taking them from two disabled barges off Assateague light.

In New York city high tides again swept the waterfront, interfering with ferry traffic on the Hudson river between New York and Jersey City.

Offshore, the liner Munamar radioed that she was hove to in the gale, while the President Roosevelt wirelessed that she would come in a day late because of the storm.

Colorado Fugitive Is Granted Freedom

DENVER, Col., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Within a few days, Glenn Smeeman, who as Harry Stanley became a successful Cleveland businessman after his escape from a Colorado convict road gang, will walk from the state penitentiary a free man, so far as Colorado is concerned.

The release of Smeeman was made possible when Governor Edwin C. Johnson issued an executive order commuting Smeeman's three years and one month sentence for motor car theft to six months. Smeeman probably will be released from prison the first of next week. "Good time" allowances mean the Cleveland music publisher will leave the penitentiary as soon as necessary formalities are completed.

Foreign Service Changes.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Foreign service changes announced today by the state department included: Flavius J. Chapman III, of Virginia, third secretary of legation at Peiping, China, assigned consul at Montreal, Canada. It was also announced today that the American consulate at Cali, Colombia, is being closed and all records removed to Buenaventura, Colombia.

MIGHTIEST FLEET READY FOR BATTLE

Annual Pacific War Games Begin Off Honolulu Harbor Today.

HONOLULU, T. H., Jan. 28.—(UP)—One of the mightiest armadas since the World War lay off Honolulu harbor tonight ready for the start of Uncle Sam's annual Pacific war games.

Destroyers, cruisers, mine layers, submarines and airplane carriers representing the combined strength of the Atlantic and Pacific fleets, rode at anchor.

Ashore marching men, rumbling gun tractors and fleet scout planes added to the war atmosphere as the army's land and air forces prepared to "defend" Hawaii from attack.

Honolulu will be the prize of the mimic warfare beginning tomorrow with the Pacific fleet, augmented by land and air forces, defending the island. The Atlantic fleet, supported by the navy's aerial armada, will attack them, in an effort to sweep on to the mainland to lay waste to San Francisco, Los Angeles or some other port vital to coastal defense.

The games, the most momentous in Pacific history, will continue for a week. Then the scenes will shift to undisclosed areas. Defending forces will seek these positions and apprise mainland defenses where the hostile forces may attack.

On the mainland Uncle Sam's vast coastal defenses will come into play. They will seek to repel the invaders with long range barrages until defending dreadnaughts can launch counter-attacks.

More than 30,000 sailors and soldiers will participate. Most maneuvers will be secret. They will be conducted as though the United States were at war, with strategists, technologists and general staffs pitting their wits in a deadly struggle.

Not in years has a more elaborate battle line been laid out, observers declare.

The games are considered more than usually significant this year and greater attention than ever has been attracted to them because of general world conditions.

U. S., LIBERIA CLASH OVER $5,000,000 DEBT

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(UP)—A diplomatic clash between the American and Liberian governments in which the former charged that Liberia had violated its $5,000,000 loan contract with the Finance Corporation of America, a subsidiary of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., was revealed today by the state department.

So violent has been the controversy that the American legation in Monrovia deemed it necessary to return, without reading, a "discourteous" note from the secretary of President Barclay, of Liberia.

The trouble arose over an act passed by the Liberian legislature calling for suspension of payments on the finance company's loan and the dismissal by the Liberian government of one of its American financial advisors.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith and their two daughters, Frances, 9, and Margaret, 5, and a maid were in the house at the time. None was injured.

Loved ones need you!

—you dare not fail them

IT is great to live for others and make them happy . . . but if one is "half well" he or she should pause a moment and reason in a common-sense way what is the cause of that tired feeling and its relation to the blood.

Hemoglobin, in the red-cells of the blood, plays an important role in body vitality—it acts as the carrying agent to take the vital oxygen from the lungs to all parts of the body—even to the skin—and brings the accumulated body poison back to the lungs to be thrown off.

Overwork, worry, colds, sickness and diet neglect frequently reduce the red-cells and the hemoglobin content of the blood—and when these are reduced the body and mind are not normal.

this means much to you

S.S.S., in addition to being a valuable general tonic, has the special property of increasing the red-cells and restoring the hemoglobin content of the blood, when deficient.

The right amount of hemoglobin in the blood makes a vast difference in the way you feel and look. It means sufficient oxygen . . . better assimilation of food . . . more energy . . . and more resistance.

that tired feeling

as it is commonly called, symptomed by exhaustion, weakness, faintness, dizziness, drowsiness, lack of concentrating power, is most frequently directly related to the red-blood-cells and their hemoglobin.

even the appetite

lags when there is not enough hemoglobin in the blood stream to give the system the oxygen it needs and to free it of poison.

can function properly only when there is sufficient oxygen in the blood to "burn" the food consumed. A lack of oxygen may result in impaired nutrition . . . gas . . . abdominal discomfort . . . nausea . . . constipation . . . diarrhea . . . headache . . . underweight, etc.

one feels happier

when the red-blood-cells and their hemoglobin content are up to their full quota. A deficiency in the oxygen-carrying hemoglobin may result in paleness, poor complexion, poor circulation, numbness, pricking sensations, restlessness, nervousness, irritability or sleeplessness.

then why not try S.S.S.

—the proven tonic for increasing the red-cells and hemoglobin—proved effective by scientific research and millions of happy users. It may be the very means of bringing better health and more happiness to you.

Start taking a course of S.S.S. today. It is sold by all drug stores in two convenient sizes—the larger size is more economical and is sufficient for a two week's treatment. Don't permit anyone to "sidetrack" you in your determination to restore your red-blood-cells and hemoglobin back to normal.

EMORY ARRANGES INSTITUTE PLANS

Talmadge, Odum, Ackerman Among Speakers on List.

Headed by some of America's best-known authorities on journalism and public affairs, the complete lecture staff for the combined Georgia Press Institute and Emory Institute of Citizenship, to be held February 7-11 on the Emory campus, was announced Saturday by university officials.

The entire program will be open to the public without charge, with the exception of two luncheons and one round-table discussion designed for members of the Georgia Press Association, it was stated.

Notables to Speak.

Among the notable figures who will speak are Governor Eugene Talmadge, Mrs. Corra Harris, author; Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of Hygeia and author of numerous books and articles on health topics; Charles Stephenson Smith, chief of the foreign service of the Associated Press; Dr. Howard H. Odum, sociologist, author and editor of Social Forces; Dr. Walter C. Jackson, dean of the school of public administration at the University of North Carolina; Dr. Charles Pergler, European diplomat and authority on international law; Dr. Harold Gosnell, a member of the editorial staff for President Hoover's commission on social trends, and Dean Carl Ackerman, of the Pulitzer school of journalism, Columbia University.

Dr. Gosnell will open the institute at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, February 7, with an address on "Interest in Public Affairs as Reflected by Straw Votes, Primaries and Elections." He also will conduct two round tables on this topic. Dr. Pergler will speak Tuesday night on "Some Forgotten Intergovernmental Debts" and also will conduct discussion groups on "Political Parties of Europe and America."

Editors' Luncheon.

On Wednesday afternoon, February 8, Julian Harris, advertising director of The Constitution, will lead discussion on "The Future of the Democratic Party." The address by Dr. Howard W. Odum on "New Frontiers of Leadership in Public Affairs" is scheduled for Wednesday night.

Features of especial interest to newspapermen are being grouped on Thursday and Friday of the institute, for the benefit of country editors who cannot be present for the entire program, it was stated. Governor Talmadge will speak Thursday afternoon. A symposium on "How Newspapers Are Combating the Depression" will follow a luncheon in honor of Georgia editors on Thursday, while at a similar luncheon on Friday Dean Carl Ackerman, of the Pulitzer school of journalism at Columbia, will speak on "News, Editorials and Public Opinion."

The address of Charles Stephenson Smith on "The Press and International Relations" will come at 10 o'clock Thursday morning, and Mrs. Corra Harris will speak at the same hour Friday morning on "Editors." Dr. Morris Fishbein will speak Thursday night on "Public Opinion on Problems of Health," and Dean Ackerman will deliver his main address Friday night on "The Newspaper in Public Affairs."

Dr Cullen B. Gosnell and Professor Raymond B. Nixon, of the Emory faculty, are directing the joint program.

EXTENSION SOUGHT FOR CHEST AGENCY TO "HELP PEOPLE"

Extension of the Atlanta Goodwill Industry, an agency of the Community Chest, in order to "help people to help themselves," was announced Saturday by the Rev. G. E. Holley, general superintendent for the southern area, who said that new equipment which will be secured will enable the movement to teach trades such as shoe repairing and woodwork repair. The Goodwill program is to gather used clothing and furniture for renovation and repair, thereby furnishing employment to the needy.

During the past year, according to the Rev. Holley, $3,000,000 was the sum paid out by Goodwill industries as relief wages throughout the United States. The Atlanta branch maintains a truck for gathering cast off clothing and furniture and a telephone call to MAin 1220 will bring a truck for the material.

CHILD BADLY BURNED, TWO OTHERS TREATED

Burned over the entire body after his nightgown caught fire from an open grate, Jimmie Lee Southard, 5-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Southard, of 277 Washington street, was reported in serious condition at Grady hospital Saturday night. His mother attempted to beat out the flames with her hands but was successful only after his body was badly burned.

Billie, 6, and Harold, 12, sons of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Gilman, of Harold avenue, were given treatment at Grady Saturday for burns received when Billie overturned a large pot of boiling grits upon their legs.

Children Fill Fox Theater To See Show; King Cole Kiddie Club Organized Here

Thousands of Atlanta children jammed the Fox theater Saturday morning from pit to balcony when Foremost Dairies, Inc., put on its great free show for young Atlanta.

Paul E. Reinhold, president of the company, came up from Jacksonville to see the show. He and other executives pronounced it one of the finest in point of attractions and crowd the company had ever staged in the south.

Three pictures, "Babes in the Woods," "Saddle Buster," and a newsreel were presented, and in addition Miss Virginia Semond put on a 15-minute dancing act.

At the conclusion of the entertainment King Cole, master of ceremonies who led his great audience in community singing, accompanied by Jimmy Beers at the organ, organized the King Cole Kiddie Club, composed of children up to 14. The members were also given Foremost nickels, good at founts for "Dixie Doodle," a frozen novelty.

An idea of the size of the attendance may be gained from the fact that 8,500 of these nickels were distributed. Every seat was taken, in many cases by two children, and others stood in the aisles. Still others had to be turned away.

Beginning next Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, members of the club will take part in a radio program over WSB.

With Mr. Reinhold as interested observers of Saturday's celebration were Charles Duncan, Atlanta plant manager, and P. I. Henderson, district manager of Foremost.

"We were naturally very much gratified over the attendance of children at our show," Mr. Reinhold said. "I may have seen more children at one time but I can't just now recall the occasion. I didn't know there were so many children in the world."

Mr. Reinhold added that the dairy business was showing improvement.

"Since late last fall the improvement with us has been marked," he said. "There can be no doubt about the substantial, genuine nature of this betterment.

"I look to see a steady improvement—no boom, of course. Collections are also improved. There is a much better feeling everywhere. I think that the dairy industry is a good barometer of business conditions. We contact every class of consumer."

Shorter Hours in Industry Urged By Consumers' League Official

"Because the world-wide trend is toward shorter hours for industrial workers, the southern states should catch up in regulating hours of work," said Miss Lucy Randolph Mason, general secretary of the National Consumers' League, Saturday. Miss Mason is staying a few days at the Piedmont hotel and seeing persons interested in labor legislation. She also has been traveling in North and South Carolina. The National Consumers' League was organized in 1899 to combat bad conditions for workers in industry, and following the death of Mrs. Florence Kelley, Miss Mason was called from her home in Richmond to head the organization.

In a talk with Governor Eugene Talmadge, Miss Mason pointed out the economic and industrial reasons for the shorter day, and particularly the necessity for relieving unemployment, increasing the purchasing power of wage-earners and putting a solid foundation of law beneath operating practices so that all manufacturers can know that their competitors cannot resort to long hours in an effort to lower labor costs and undersell competitors. She stated that the governor expressed himself "as fundamentally in sympathy" with efforts to shorten the work day.

The greatest single barrier to effective regulation of hours of work in southern states, according to Miss Mason, is opposition on the part of the majority of textile manufacturers who represent the south's largest industry and the one which habitually uses the long 55-hour week and much night work.

"And yet," Miss Mason pointed out, "many of the most far-sighted and constructive leaders in the cotton-textile industry realize that production needs could be met on a single shift 48-hour week of steady operation throughout the year. Some of these men advocate a federal eight-hour day to regularize the industry and eliminate unfair competition.

Miss Mason advocates state laws regulating the work day for both men and women in all manufacturing industries—the Georgia law covers only textile operatives and has no enforcement provisions; drastic limitation on hours of work at night; minimum wage legislation; better child labor laws including the elimination of children under 16 from industry, and adequate enforcement of labor laws. She stated that any southern state could with absolute safety to its competitive status set a maximum limit of hours to daily operation and 55 hours per week, but she advocates a regional conference between competing southern states to secure a 48-hour week.

Owing to the improvement in machinery with increasing technogical unemployment, the necessity for spreading work and increasing purchasing power, Miss Mason believes that laws should include both men and women. Both the industrial workers, industry itself and farmers would be benefited by raising the status and buying power of industrial workers.

Allen and Woolford Head Tourist Bureau

Ivan Allen was elected president and Cator Woolford first vice president in charge of tourists at the annual meeting of the board of directors of the Atlanta Convention and Tourist Bureau held Friday afternoon. Gregory C. Bowden was elected second vice president in charge of conventions.

Under the direction of Mr. Woolford, Georgia's superior advantages as a tourist state are to be co-ordinated and those of other cities in the state, as well as Atlanta's, are to be given publicity.

New directors elected are Ronald Ransom, Alva Maxwell, Georga F. Longino, Herbert E. Choate and Scott Allen.

Ivan Allen was the first president of the bureau when it was organized 20 years ago.

A report for 1932, read at the meeting, showed that 289 conventions were held here with an attendance of 36,955 delegates. Sixty-six conventions already are booked for 1933.

FRENCH INFLUENCE ON ART SUBJECT OF SKIDMORE TALK

"The French Impressionists and Their Influence" will be the subject of a lecture which will be given at the High Museum of Art this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock by L. P. Skidmore, the director.

His lecture will be illustrated with 40 slides. These will give the history of the movement and the theory of the impressionists. Four leading exponents of this school will be discussed.

The influence of these impressionists is still felt in modern painting, Mr. Skidmore says, and can be seen in the works of the Association of Georgia Artists which are on exhibit in the museum. This exhibition will close after today.

On next Wednesday the museum will open one of the most notable exhibits of paintings ever shown here. This will consist of the undersea paintings of Chris E. H. Olsen. These were brought from the American Museum of Natural History in New York, and were made at the Bahama Islands 200 feet below the surface of the ocean.

The Atlanta exhibit will be the first to be shown in America outside of New York.

MAGICIANS SEE AID IN CAMEL PUBLICITY

Professional magicians see a big boom ahead for magic and the magic theater as a direct result of the present cigaret advertising campaign. They feel that the new advertising will bring magic back as a headliner in the show business.

This became known as the result of a check-up on opinion in the profession.

While the corridors of magic hummed with the news of the new "magic cigaret ads," and protests were heard in some directions, the consensus of opinion was that a new fad for magic loomed up ahead.

Joseph Dunninger is reputed to be the most remarkable mind reader of this generation. In talking about the new Camel advertising campaign, he said:

"The descriptions of famous tricks in the recent cigaret advertisements promise to re-create for the modern public the ancient charm of magic shows. I commend this campaign as I believe it will introduce an even wider public to the fascinations of this form of entertainment."

BUILDING, TRADE SHOW INCREASES

Reserve Report Records Substantial Improvement Over November.

Increase of building permits in the southeast of 72.7 per cent over November and increase in retail sales of 51.7 over the previous month were highlights in the trend toward economic recovery during December of last year, according to figures released Saturday by the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta in the regular monthly review of financial, agricultural, trade and industrial conditions in the sixth federal reserve district.

While the decrease from retail sales of the previous December was 24.3 per cent, lower prices accounted in large measure for the drop in sales by dollar value. Daily average sales last month were 45.8 greater than in November.

Despite the fact that building permits in the southeast have declined in dollar volume each year since 1925, the December increase over November was 72.7 per cent, and were only 5.7 per cent less than for the same month in 1931.

Contract awards for December were 15.1 per cent greater than for December, 1931. Another business field showing increase in sales over November was paid-for life insurance which was 12.9 per cent greater than the previous month.

Indicating further progress of depletion of retail stocks, wholesale trade declined, though lower prices accounted in part for the drop of 24.7 per cent lower than in 1931. Consumption of cotton by American mills dropped 12.6 per cent from November to December, but last month compared to December, 1931, showed a 5.9 per cent increase in cotton consumption. Cotton yarn manufacturing also showed a slight increase over December, 1931.

The final agricultural report for 1932 "confirmed earlier indications of substantially lower production of crops raised for sale and heavier production of feed crops than occurred in either of the last two years.

ELKS TO PRESENT PROGRAM FEB. 5 AT PARAMOUNT

Opportunity of enjoying an elaborate show and helping to carry on the work of the Elks' Emergency kitchen will be offered Atlantans as the result of arrangements completed Friday for a program at the Paramount theater at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, February 5. Mayor James L. Key has signed a permit for the Sunday entertainment. Admission will be 50 cents.

More than 100 children, in costume, will appear under direction of the Gordon-Eppley School of Dancing. The Elks quartet will offer several numbers.

"Undercover Man," a thrilling film featuring Nancy Carroll, George Raft and Lew Cody, will be shown, together with a newsreel and short features.

This is the first appeal of the Elks for public support of the project. Meal tickets for distribution among the needy will be passed out with each ticket for the show.

ATLANTANS TO SEEK METHODIST MEETING

Atlanta will make a strong effort to bring the next quadrennial general conference of the Methodist church to this city and will lay before the committee on selection an invitation when that body meets in Nashville, Tenn., Tuesday to view invitations from other southern cities, according to announcement by Fred Houser, secretary of the Atlanta Convention and Tourist Bureau. A definite decision concerning the convention city will be given about April 1.

In preparing the invitation a committee of ministers and hotel men was appointed, including Dr. R. L. Russell, chairman; Dr. S. T. Senter, Dr. Harvey W. Cox, Dr. S. H. C. Burgin, Dr. John S. Jenkins, Dr. W. A. Shelton and Dr. Wallace Rogers. The hotel representatives on the committee were Jake Abelson, James F. DeJarnette, W. C. Royer, E. P. Simmons, W. G. Hastings, J. A. Dunwody, Robert Carpenter and Fred Houser.

J. O. LEARD WINS PRIZE FOR POSTER

J. O. Leard, of the Purser Union, of West End Baptist church, has been named winner of the temperance poster contest among four organizations of the young people in Atlanta churches, according to announcement by M. Graham Clark, chairman of the Young People's Commission of the Atlanta Christian Council. The winning poster in each group was entered in the finals.

Those who entered the finals with their posters were William G. Kurtz Jr., of the Methodist Young People's League; Miss Iris Keen and Jack Yarbrough, of the Grant Park Christian Society, and Mr. Leard. Mr. Clark said the movement had been one of the most interesting of the activities of the Young People's Commission, and attributed much credit for success of the contest to Kendrick Kelly, chairman of the temperance committee of the commission.

MAIER & BERKELE OPEN LARGE SALE

A half-million-dollar stock of jewelry figures in a stock reducing sale begun last Friday by Maier & Berkele, jewelers, of 111 Peachtree street, N. E. The sale is in line with the plans of H. A. Maier, president of the company, who recently returned to the active management of the company.

The sale does not mean that the company is discontinuing business, it was pointed out, but is simply a means to reduce the stock, especially the high-priced items.

Mr. Maier explained that his company proposed to popularize its stock and prices in line with present business conditions. In some cases the expensive stock is priced at a figure a third below cost.

Hard-Pressed Family Discovers Chest Haven of Safety, Refuge

By EDNA LEE.

Take the Gillies.

Just an average family—the Gillies. Tom the father, worked every day—and had to cut corners and do lots of fighting to pay the butcher and the baker and buy shoes for the kids and meat for the dog.

But he did it. Mom cooked lots of good hot cereals and thick nourishing soups and bread puddings with raisins sticking out here and there.

And Tom's brood of five were rosy and happy—even if they did have to do without lots of things.

Then along came the old Depression. At first the Depression was just a name to the Gillies.

"Gosh," said Tom, with a grin. "I haven't ever known anything else." And he took a hitch in his belt and went on.

Now, this isn't a sob story. Tom didn't lose his job. True, he took a couple of cuts along with the other fellows and later went on the five-day-a-week-plan—then three—and finally—two.

Now two days a week work isn't much work for a man with a bunch of kids and a wife and a dog. But Tom just scratched his head and he and Mom did the best they could. And they kept things going. Maybe the soups weren't quite as thick—and the cereals weren't quite so frequent, but the kids are still rosy and happy—and Tom's grin is just as wide.

"How did you do it?" I asked him.

He scratched his carrot top. "Well," he told me, "when I was cut down to two days a week work—Mom and I sat down to figure. What we could cut out, you know, to reduce expense. What was so important that we couldn't cut on it. And we decided that keeping the kids healthy and happy was the biggest job we had. So everything I've earned has gone to the rent and food for the kids."

"But," I reasoned, "In two years a family of six people must have had sickness. What about doctors and medicine."

He nodded in assent.

"Yeah. We had sickness—Jimmy's tonsils had to come out. Sister had some grandular trouble—Buster needed glasses."

"But what did you do?"

"I went to those ladies down to the Family Welfare Society," he explained, "and told them exactly the fix I was in. And they sent me to clinics. You see Atlanta has clinics for kids like my kids that can't pay. And they gave 'em mighty good attention, I tell you."

"But," I argued, "suppose there had been no clinics. What would you have done then?"

He thought. Then "I don't know," he said, quietly, "but you see they do have the clinics. For the Community Chest knows that we can't forget the children."

And the Community Chest is right. We can't forget the children.

Then be glad that in your community you have the Community Chest and its agencies—be glad that they are looking after the children who—like Tom's kids—can't pay.

It Takes More Than Salts, Calomel, Mineral Waters, Oils, or Laxative Pills to Arouse a Sluggish Liver

These drugs give only temporary relief from constipation because they have no effect whatever on the liver or its production of bile. Bile is nature's own laxative and your stomach and bowels require at least one quart of fresh bile every day to keep them clean, pure, free from fermentation, putrefaction, gas and disease germs.

When your liver becomes torpid or sluggish the bile stagnates and stops flowing freely. The contents of your bowels become the breeding place for germs and poisons; your food does not digest—it just ferments and decays in the bowels. The blood absorbs these poisons and you suffer from constipation, gas, sick headaches, biliousness, nervousness and sour stomach.

Sargon Soft Mass Pills will remove the cause of this condition and purify your entire system in nature's way. They are not like any other medicine you have ever taken. They are so gentle, thorough and natural in their action that there is nothing about them to remind you that you have ever taken a medicine, and most remarkable of all you gradually reduce the dose until you no longer require a laxative at all.

Five years ago it was generally believed that calomel and laxative drugs stimulated the liver, but modern science has proved that calomel, salts, mineral waters, oils and other laxatives have no effect whatever on the liver.

Sargon Soft Mass Pills act directly on the liver because they contain two amazing substances which highest medical authorities agree are the only effective stimulants to the bile-producing activity of the liver known to modern science. These substances stimulate and invigorate the liver to cleanse and purify itself through increasing its production of bile. This fresh bile immediately starts to work neutralizing acids and poisons, stopping fermentation and decay, cleansing and purifying the bowels and sweeping out accumulated poisons.

Unless you have tried Sargon Soft Mass Pills you can have no idea of the effects produced by this natural cleansing of your liver and bowels. It makes you feel years younger, stronger, healthier and happier. It brings back life and color to faded eyes and cheeks, restores the appetite and sound digestion—gives you a new outlook on life itself.

Insist on genuine Sargon Soft Mass Pills. Don't be misled. There are only two known substances which will actually stimulate a torpid or sluggish liver to cleanse and purify itself by increasing its production of bile. Sargon Soft Mass Pills contain both of these substances and no other advertised medicine on the American market today does contain them. Only 60c for a full thirty-day treatment. ATHENS, Ga., Jan. 28.—Headed by Governor Eugene Talmadge, Sigma Nu alumni Friday night attended a banquet given by the University of Georgia chapter honoring all alumni of the fraternity residing in the state. Judge L. P. Goodrich, of Griffin, acted as toastmaster.

Earlier in the afternoon Mu chapter, located at the University of Georgia, held its annual initiation of new members. After the banquet both alumni, active members, and the neophytes attended a formal dance at the physical education building on the campus of the State College of Agriculture.

"Marry a good woman" was the advice given youthful members of the fraternity by Governor Talmadge in his address at the banquet. The governor said that the lives of all great men were influenced for good by their wives and that the history of all the world supported his allegation.

Others speakers called upon by Judge Goodrich included Chancellor Charles M. Snelling, of the University System of Georgia; President S. V. Sanford, of the university; L. W. (Chip) Robert, of Atlanta; Judge John B. Guerry, of the state court of appeals; State Senator Fred Morris, of Marietta; Colonel J. C. Woodward, of College Park; W. L. Kemp, of Atlanta; Thomas J. PLAN TO BUILD ROADS AS RELIEF PROJECT

WEST POINT, Ga., Jan. 28.—Plans are being perfected for a county-wide relief project in Chambers county, Alabama. According to Probate Judge W. C. Batson, all money needed will be available out of funds allotted to the state by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Road improvement will be utilized to give employment to the needy and the amount of road building accomplished will depend upon the number of applicants for work. This feature of the relief project will be under the direction of a competent engineer to be furnished the county by the Alabama highway department.

The board of county commissioners will select the roads to be improved. Their plans are said to include asphalting the graded road from Lanett to LaFayette.

Wages to be paid the workers will be 50 cents a day. Already about 500 application cards have been signed.

Milledgeville Would Be Capital for Day

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., Jan. 28.—Milledgeville may be the capital of Georgia again, for one day, if the plans of the local bicentennial committee here are carried to completion.

Because Milledgeville was the capital for 68 glamorous years, during which historic events occurred here in the old state house and elsewhere in the county, Milledgeville citizens think it would be a fitting part of Georgia's celebration for the seat of government to again be in Milledgeville for one day.

BAINBRIDGE CHARITIES BODY SUSPENDS WORK

BAINBRIDGE, Ga., Jan. 28.—This city is without an active local organization for the care of its indigent citizens now that the Associated Charities, which for years has cared for the underprivileged and the unemployed, has disbanded. That group this week, by an announcement in the local press over the name of the Rev. M. M. Marshall, president, announced that it is suspending work and asks the public "not to refer any who appeal for help to those who have been working with the Associated Charities."

The statement assigned as the cause for suspension the fact that they had been "refused support by the citizens of Bainbridge and the county commissioners in particular." A mass meeting has been called for Monday night to be held in the courthouse in an endeavor to work out plans for the care of those who are unemployed. The local Red Cross chapter is still active in meting out clothing and provisions sent here by the national organization.

GEORGIA TAX SYSTEM UNFAIR, SAYS BLALOCK

WAYCROSS, Ga., Jan. 28.—"The present tax system in Georgia is unfair and unjust. It has never been enforced. It will never be enforced. It cannot be enforced."

Judge J. D. Blalock thus summarized the Georgia tax system before the Kiwanis Club Friday, going on to say:

"The Georgia tax system, because it taxes property that cannot be hid, leaving other property to go untaxed, falls unfairly on certain property owners. Mortgages and notes, for example, are limited to 8 per cent interest. If returned for tax at full value they would earn less. Much of this property goes untaxed.

"The people are rebelling against the unfair tax situation in Georgia. They demand that taxes be collected equally from all classes of people.

"It is difficult to collect taxes under the present system because immediate possession is denied and the costs of levy and such expenses must be paid, even though possession is denied.

"Our legislators ought to pass a form of tax more equitable and fully enforceable."

DRIVE ON VANDALISM LAUNCHED BY POLICE

Following six arrests during the last week in a police campaign against vandalism, Chief T. O. Sturdivant announced Saturday that an extra squad of patrolmen will be assigned the job of preventing the ravaging of vacant residences by thieves. The chief said damage to the extent of $50,000 had been done to unoccupied houses within the last year.

All those arrested were negroes, it was said. They were taken into custody for investigation after stolen articles were found in their homes. Property owners in the city have complained to the police that vandals have removed lighting and plumbing fixtures and other articles left in vacant houses. Three patrolmen already are working in the campaign and two more will be added this week, Sturdivant said.

State Bedroom Contest Winner Is Cherokee County 4-H Club Girl

ATHENS, Ga., Jan. 28.—A bedroom with a dark brown floor, cream-colored walls, equipped with comfortable furniture painted a light green color, and artistically furnished with rugs, wardrobe curtain, shades and a bedspread, was good enough to win for Charlotte Brown, Cherokee county club girl, the state prize of a $200 cash scholarship to the Georgia State College of Agriculture in the bedroom contest for 1932. This fact was made known here today by Miss Willie Vie Dowdy, extension economist in home management, who has charge of the state contest.

The college scholarship is awarded annually to the winner of this contest by Rich's, Inc., of Atlanta.

In discussing how the old bedroom was renovated into a state winner, Charlotte pointed out that she only spent $6.18 for all the furnishings used, but it took 43 hours of her labor to put this money into its best usage. "Every girl longs for a bedroom that she can call her own," this 4-H Club girl says. "With so much inexpensive material within reach, what is there to hinder any girl from having a bedroom?

"The bedroom I chose to improve was a family room—merely a place to sleep. The room had neither paint nor rugs on the floor. I made my chair from an old buggy seat and some scrap lumber. The springs from the buggy seat were put in the back of the chair. The chair was padded with excelsior and covered with cretonne. The windows were curtained by dyeing some white glass curtains cream. Window shades were made from feed sacks dyed cream, and draperies were made from sheets dyed lavender. My rugs are made from burlap and old rags that I dyed."

'Christian Index' Was Established By Jesse Mercer 100 Years Ago

WASHINGTON, Ga., Jan. 28.—The Christian Index, whose 100th anniversary Georgia Baptists will celebrate while observing Georgia's bicentennial, was established here in 1833 by the Rev. Jesse Mercer.

"Surfeited with politics" was the immediate incentive, it may be judged, for the purchase of the Index from its owner and publisher at Philadelphia, and the removal of the plant to Washington, Ga.

In the stormy days of the Clark-Crawford feud, Mercer took a rather active part in state politics. At the constitutional convention in 1798 he checked an effort to debar ministers from the general assembly by moving to amend, by substituting "lawyers and doctors" for "ministers;" but promptly withdrew his amendment on condition that the original motion be also withdrawn.

Again in 1816 this noted Baptist divine was defeated for the state senate and in 1833, the year the Index was purchased, when his friends urged him to enter the gubernatorial race, he replied, "No, I am surfeited with politics." Forthwith Dr. Mercer became editor and publisher of the Christian Index, in connection with pastoral duties at the Washington Baptist church, which had been constituted by him and nine others on December 27, 1827, and to the pastorate of which church he was called January 20, 1828, serving until his death in 1841.

With the removal of the printing plant to Washington and the assumption of editorial work by Mr. Mercer, the Index became the first organ of the Baptist denomination in Georgia, if not in the south. At a quaint oak desk, still locally owned, major editorial work was wrought by Editor Mercer for seven years at his home, now a retreat for Catholic laymen of Georgia. The mechanical end of the Christian Index of 100 years ago was conducted in a building a block away from the Mercer home and school. On this spot today, the playhouse of the Washington-Wilkes Little theater stands.

With signs of failing health Mr. Mercer donated the Christian Index to the Georgia Baptist convention in 1840, and after the War Between the States, Atlanta became its home.

While finding the labor of the penirksome, the great preacher still held an interest in the fourth estate, and on February 27, 1841, the year of his death, Pastor Mercer gave the Washington Baptist church "a house and lot for a printing office," which, it is said, was sold in 1864 and the proceeds invested in Confederate bonds.

The Christian Index, like Mercer University, was made possible by the inherited wealth of Mrs. Nancy Simonds, who became the second wife of the Washington preacher

LEGISLATOR OPPOSES COUNTY BOARD CHANGE

MOUNT VERNON, Ga., Jan. 28.—(AP)—A movement has been started to legislate the Montgomery county board of roads and revenues out of office and substitute a one-commissioner form of government.

Notice that such legislation would be sought was published in the weekly Montgomery Monitor, but Representative Johnson disclaimed any knowledge of the movement, for which he intimated lack of sympathy.

"I do not intend to be log-rolled or railroaded into any position," he said. "I have the old-fashioned, unadulterated backbone to hold the right and stick up for the wishes of my people whom I represent and not be forced to any stand by a few."

Twelve Cents a Dozen Price of Eggs in Henry

McDONOUGH, Ga., Jan. 27.—Spring has come to Henry county. Flag lilies, violets, flowering quince or apricot, daffodils, jonquils, hyacinths both white and blue, thrift and many other early bloomers have united with the yellow jasmine and Christmas honeysuckle in proclaiming the news. Many people are gardening, eggs have dropped to 12 cents a dozen, and the budding trees are luring the fishermen. Owners of huge hogs are sighing and hoping for a change of weather. Many have not killed the largest porkers and are looking forward to the cold of February and March.

COURT ASKED TO OUST TALMADGE APPOINTEE

IRWINTON, Ga., Jan. 28.—One of the first legal battles over an appointment by Governor Talmadge was commenced here today by J. W. Holland, seeking to oust Alexander S. Boone Sr., who was commissioned by Governor Talmadge, two days after the governor assumed office, as a member of the board of education of Wilkinson county. A writ of quo warranto was filed in Wilkinson superior court here.

The Wilkinson county grand jury elected Holland on October 5 to succeed N. S. Bacon to the board of education. Boone, who was then clerk of Wilkins superior court but who was succeeded in that office by W. L. Council on January 1, did not certify the grand jury appointment of Holland to the governor until about December 1 and Governor Russell neglected to issue the commission to Holland before he went out of office. Almost immediately after taking office, Governor Talmadge issued a commission to Boone as a member of the board of education instead of to Holland, despite the fact that the October grand jury had elected Holland.

Boone has presented his commission from Talmadge and been sworn in, whereupon the writ of quo warronto was filed today to oust Boone, the petition asserting that Governor Talmadge's issuance of a commission to Boone was illegal and seeking to declare the office vacant. Holland and County School Superintendent Julian Bloodworth and their attorneys, C. B. McCullar, of Milledgeville, and Victor Davidson, of Irwinton, presented the petition to Judge James B. Park at Greensboro this afternoon and Judge Park issued a rule directing Boone to show cause before him at Madison at 10:30 a. m. on February 3 as to his title and claim to the office.

Governor Talmadge Saturday night was in Miami, where he flew in an airplane with C. H. King, Wiley Moore and William Owens.

LETTER FROM MEXICO ABOUT GEORGIA CLOCK

McDONOUGH, Ga., Jan. 27.—A letter from Mexico City requesting information as to the accuracy of the recent account in the New York Times of the historic Fouche clock has been received by the present owner, Mrs. Carrie Fouche, of McDonough. This ancient timepiece, 8 1-2 feet tall, equal in age to the United States or possibly antedating its beginnings as proved by the use of dots instead of lines to measure the minutes, was made, it is thought in Plymouth, England. The face records the days of the month as well as the hours and the inscription thereon is S. Thomas, Plymouth.

A fixture in the Fouche family for about 140 years, a peculiarity of the clock is the fact that after being mute for years the gong began to strike when a member of the family died in the 1870's and again as the body was being carried from the house. It is running again at present and keeping excellent time after a silence of 10 years, but it is not striking.

Members of the team are William Bodenhamer, of Decatur; Brainerd Currie, of Augusta, and J. A. Bulloch and Searcy Garrison, of Ochlochnee.

Successful Airplane Built by Non-Aviator

SAVANNAH, Ga., Jan. 28.—(AP) A home-made airplane, built by a man who is not an aviator and propelled by an automobile motor, has been given its first test here and it took to the air 300 feet from the starting point.

It was built by F. M. Teston, who makes a hobby by studying aviation, although he has never piloted a plane. The successful flight of his craft spurred his interest and now he is planning to take up flying in earnest and become a pilot.

AMERICUS TO ISSUE $10,000 IN CITY SCRIP

AMERICUS, Ga., Jan. 28.—Ten thousand dollars in "city bills" will be issued by Americus municipal authorities and placed in circulation here beginning February 1. The bills will be issued in denominations of one and five dollars and will be receivable at par for all dues and debts owing to the city of Americus, including water bills and past-due taxes after December 1, 1933. It is planned to pay city employes in the scrip in the ratio of 40 per cent scrip and 60 per cent cash. Employes of the city school system have already been notified their next pay checks will consist of cash and scrip in the ratio above named.

In announcing the issue of scrip here today Mayor James A. Fort stated that on December 31, 1932, there was owing to the city in past-due taxes and water rents a total of $66,777.37 and on that date the municipality owed in bills and notes only $23,367.37. The scrip, he said, will be issued in an effort to facilitate the collection of the items with a view of being helpful to local taxpayers and in the hope that the issue will prove beneficial to all concerned. Coincidental with passage of an ordinance authorizing issuance of scrip for the payment of city expenses, a budget ordinance was also passed which provides for a reduction of $7,500 in city expenditures during the current year.

GUEDALLA TO LECTURE ON DUKE WELLINGTON

Sprightly wit and scintillating epigram are expected to feature the lecture by Philip Guedalla on "Wellington: the Duke and the Man," under auspices of the Emory University Student Lecture Association at Glenn Memorial church, at 8:15 o'clock Monday night, February 6. The lecture is regarded by many as the best in the repertoire of the writer and lecturer.

Appreciated in America as much as in his native England, Guedalla's lectures have won audiences and readers of his books. His pen-pictures of monarchs, soldiers and statesmen are said to be more than matched in his talks. His studies of Washington, Napoleon, Disraeli, Kitchener, Baldwin, MacDonald and others have won him fame as a biographer. Now he has turned the searchlight of his new historical methods upon literary figures.

The lecture will be open to the general public and an admission price of 50 cents per person will be charged. No seats in the auditorium will be reserved

SAVANNAH STIRRED BY TAX PROPOSALS

Suggestion of Municipal Sales Tax Rouses Opposition From Many.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Jan. 28.—Not in the memory of the oldest inhabitant, or perhaps, dating back to the time of Oglethorpe himself, has Savannah been so thoroughly aroused over the matter of taxes as it is at the present moment. Everybody is talking about decreased pay for public officials, reductions in appropriations for various city and county departments and the suggestion that there shall be more taxes paid for various things.

The real red rag of taxation hereabouts seems to be the sales tax. Not only is it proposed that the state put on a sales tax but it is suggested that the city of Savannah levy a municipal sales tax. And this has aroused renewed protests from those who in the beginning had only the state sales tax to worry about.

The Savannah Real Estate Board is the sponsor of the city sales tax plan. The idea was presented to Mayor Gamble by George S. Clarke, president of the board, and L. H. Smith, a large property owner. The mayor was interested in the plan, but not committed to it. He decided to talk the matter over with the representatives in the general assembly from Chatham county. This he did today.

No final decision has been reached as to whether a bill to permit city governments to assess a sales tax will be introduced. Shelby Myrick, one of the representatives in the lower house from Chatham county, is opposed to a state sales tax. The realtors' idea is that it would take some of the burden off real estate owners.

Tuesday of next week there is to be another meeting between the mayor and the Real Estate Taxpayers' Association to talk over taxes.

NATIONAL EDUCATORS ON MERCER PROGRAM

MACON, Ga., Jan. 28.—Three nationally-known educators have been added to the list of more than a dozen prominent persons who will participate actively in Mercer University's centennial commencement program, it was announced here today by Dr. Spright Dowell, president of the institution.

Acceptance of an invitation to contribute to the four-day commemorative exercises in May has been received from Dr. William F. Ogburn, professor of sociology of the University of Chicago, who was director of research on President Hoover's commission which recently, after a survey of three years, made public a report on the social trends of the American people. Dr. Ogburn, a Georgian by birth, is an alumnus of Mercer, where he received a degree in science in 1905. He has been a member of the Chicago faculty since 1927. Before that time he was professor of sociology of Columbia University.

Dr. William H. Kilpatrick, also a native Georgian and an alumnus of Mercer, likewise has accepted an invitation to speak on the 100th commencement program. As professor of the philosophy of education in teacher's college of Columbia University he has made important contributions in the educational field. His last visit to Mercer was in 1926 when he received his third degree from the institution—on that occasion the honorary LL. D.

Dr. W. C. Jackson, dean of administration of the University of North Carolina, is the third addition to the still incomplete program. The three educators all will be heard as features of the exercises being arranged for May 29, the day before the final program and the conferring of degrees.

The centennial sermon will be preached in the Macon municipal auditorium on May 28 by Dr. George W. Truett, pastor of the First Baptist church, of Dallas, Texas, who is a former president of the Southern Baptist convention. Earlier in the day Dr. Walter Pope Binns, Roanoke, Va., pastor, will address the graduating class.

Dr. John J. Tigert, for seven years United States commissioner of education, president of the University of Florida since 1928, already has been announced as a speaker. His address will describe "One Hundred Years of Liberal Education in America." Dr. William L. Poteat, president emeritus of Wake Forest College, will speak on "One Hundred Years of Christian Education in the South."

The centennial literary address, to precede the conferring of degrees, will be by Senator Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina, who will be presented by Senator Walter F. George, of Georgia.

Mercer officials are preparing the four-day program with a view to marking important developments in education during the century of the university's existence. Opening as the "institute" with 39 students in Penfield, Ga., in January, 1833, Mercer four years later obtained its charter as a university. There are now more than 4,000 living alumni. Mercer is the only Baptist controlled institution in the United States which has a law school that complies with every standard and has received the highest rating of the American Association of Law Schools.

Chicago Schools Progress Despite Financial Reverses

Loyal Educators Develop Progressive Methods and Achieve Higher Standards in Teaching.

By S. J. DUNCAN-CLARK.
(Copyright, 1933, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—Predictions before a congressional committee that Chicago's public school system would collapse within 30 days if a federal loan were not made to pay over-due salaries of teachers, must be taken with several pinches of salt. The warning was sounded by a teacher, who, no doubt, spoke vigorously his pardonable feelings in earnest desire to impress the authorities at Washington.

Reduction in the basic pay of teachers seems inevitable in order to achieve a balanced budget. Slashing cuts have been made in all controllable expenditures at the instigation of a citizens' committee which studied the financial condition of local governing bodies, estimated prospective revenue and recommended, with mandatory tone, maximum budget totals.

The board of education has had an anxious time whittling down to the maximum allotted it. Failure to do so would mean probable forfeiture of credit with local banking concerns. School tax anticipation warrants would continue to go begging.

But, despite this trying situation, which, in its immediate form, represents two years of harassing experience for the board and serious hardship for teachers, Chicago public schools have carried on, and the likelihood is they will continue to do so, under difficulties, but with courage and effectiveness.

Chicago credits its school teachers with a magnificent loyalty. In the beginning of the depression, and before they encountered payless pay days, the teachers raised by their own efforts and liberal contributions more than $100,000 to pay for free lunches and provide shoes and other necessities for children of unemployed parents. Since then, unable to give and often in need themselves, they have stuck to their jobs and served with unfailing devotion.

That fine support has enabled Superintendent of Education Bogan to make encouraging progress in the development of more progressive methods and higher teaching standards in the system. The trend of thought and program in the Chicago school system is toward a larger measure of supervised pupil freedom, less of the pre-digested type of instruction, less of regimented thinking, less use of the teachers' mental ramrod with which to drive knowledge into pupil heads. Inquiry and discussion are invited. Stimulation of thought is a main objective.

Last year an experimental summer school for children was conducted, in which new methods were put to the test. Those that proved of value were adopted for more extended use as opportunity developed. Research has been carried on with a view to more effective dealing with children who constitute behavior problems. Chicago now has two public schools for boys who must be given special attention because of truancy or other habits requiring correction—the Moseley and the Montefiore. They have an international reputation for their high efficiency and modern methods.

Superintendent Bogan believes the reformatory might become obsolete if a program could be established for behavior problems in their incipiency. Such a program implies a more intimate relationship between school and home, and their better co-operation in the early correction of disturbing tendencies.

Pure Water Supply Pride of Spokane

By CHARLES R. STARK JR.
(Copyright, 1933, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

SPOKANE, Wash., Jan. 28.—"The finest city water supply in the world" is the challenge Spokane hurls to anyone who wants to dispute that statement. And it is prepared to back up the claim.

Not a drop of the water that runs through the taps in Spokane homes is drawn from an exposed source. All comes from an underground flow, the exact beginning of which is unknown. Some think it comes from Lake Pend d' Oreille, a 60-mile-long body of water lying across the Idaho line to the east of the city. Others say it originates on the west slope of the Rocky mountains and plunges beneath the surface there.

Wherever it starts, it has developed into a huge subterranean river by the time it reaches the city pumping station, five miles north of the municipality. There it flows 65 feet underground and only a few feet to the north of the Spokane river, but well under the bed of that stream.

Not content with its task of providing an inexhaustible flow of pure, cold water through the city wells, dug at that point, it sweeps on in scarcely diminished force under the heart of the city itself, meets a natural rock dam almost beneath the business section, turns to the north and flows under a third more of the city and then disappears to find its outlet nobody knows where.

It was back in 1883, two years after its founding, when Spokane was little more than a trading post, that some public spirited citizens put in a pump and water wheel on the river just a step from where the main business section afterward developed. The next year the growing city issued bonds and took over the system.

Ten years later fear was expressed that the Spokane river, from which the water came, might become contaminated so near city homes, and the plant was moved five miles up the river to its present site. A dam and power house were erected with a capacity of 10,000,000 gallons a day, and the problem was believed solved.

But those pioneers figured without taking one important factor into consideration. The Spokane valley is one of the most fertile spots in the country and farmers rapidly found that out. From a few scattered dwellings it became rapidly populated and again the purity of the water supply was endangered.

In 1907, investigation showed the underground flow of the glacial gravel underlying the Spokane river, and the first well was dug close to the pumping station. The next year this was put into operation and since then all city water has been obtained from the underground source, with more wells dug.

This river flows at a depth of 65 to 300 feet underground and so is safe from surface pollution. Its supply seems inexhaustible, for the pumps at the first well hurled out 56,000,000 gallons a day and lowered the water level only 44 inches in the well. Fifteen feet from the well itself the level was not disturbed.

Budget Balancing Task for Oregon

By LEON B. BAKETEL.
(Copyright, 1933, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 28.—"Balance the budget" is the cry all over the country, not merely for the federal government but for state, county and city. The Oregon legislature is in session now, bending every effort to find a way to increase state revenues and at the same time not impose an extra burden on taxpayers.

A "lame duck" session was held for a few days previous to the regular session. Nothing was accomplished because of lack of leadership. Governor Meier, committed to tax reduction, municipal ownership of public utilities and the like, was content to sit back without proposing any definite plan of battle.

Then came the regular session and, for the first time in the history of Oregon, the legislature met but did not receive a message from the chief executive. After a week, the governor finally sent a special message but it had nothing to do with balancing the budget. It urged special powers for his commissioner of utilities. A second special message urged memorializing congress to start a federal investigation of telephone holding companies.

After more than 10 days, nothing has been done toward increasing revenues. A sales tax, similar to the Mississippi plan, is frowned upon by the state grange and labor. The governor has expressed himself as favoring it, but that is as far as things have gone.

The second week of the session was enlivened by a clash between the governor and State Treasurer Holman, as members of the state board of control. The state treasurer told the governor that the fact he "was governor saved him from having his face slapped." Holman later issued a statement regretting the affair but placing the blame on the executive.

The latest turn is the declaration by Holman that Oregon faces a financial crash. He said it was impossible to borrow funds for the state as all loan sources had vanished. The ways and means committee plans to dig to the bottom of the financial mess as quickly as possible and inform the legislature so arrangements can be made to enact such revenue legislation as necessary.

Business has shown no marked pick-up the last few months. Efforts are being made to supply employment to the army of idle, and the state highway commission is doing everything within its power, but shortage of funds is proving a handicap. Much road work is going forward, but a good deal more is being held up. A heavy fall of snow, the first Portland has experienced in years, helped materially for a few days while streets were cleared and several score men were given work.

One bright spot is the lumber industry, the most important of this section. Weyerhaeuser Timber Company has put about 350 men back to work at logging camps and about 500 men are at work in mills and camps in the Grays Harbor, Wash., region. Another company has returned 200 men to work in its mills and camps and announced that indications of increasing demand may warrant putting all its 1,800 men to work during the year and stepping up output from 98,000,000 feet in 1932 to possibly 200,000,000 or 230,000,000 feet this year. Logging camps and mills all over Oregon and Washington are reopening with fair prospects for continued runs.

Citizens of the state have formed the Oregon Council for the Protection of Roadside Beauty. The program calls for "co-ordination of efforts of all organizations and agencies interested in the preservation of the esthetic and economic values of these resources; to save the unrivaled beauty of our natural forests along the roadside, preventing mutilation and defacement of our trees; to save the charm of our highways by co-operating with the forest service in preventing forest fires."

Gas Tax May Aid Rhode Island Idle

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 28.—Following the example of several other states, notably New York, Rhode Island this year may finance the greater part of her $3,000,000 unemployment relief bill with proceeds of gasoline taxes.

Until the past year, when the unemployment situation became acute, Rhode Island held steadfastly to the principle that all revenues collected from motorists, whether by registrations and license fees or by gasoline taxes, should be used exclusively for construction and reconstruction of roads and highway bridges. During last year, however, a total of $1,000,000 was taken from the state board of public roads and loaned to towns and cities for the relief of unemployment. The present law, however, requires that municipalities that received such loans must repay them to the state.

Theodore Francis Green, new democratic governor, recommended the use of proceeds of the gasoline tax—expected to reach $2,000,000 during the next fiscal year under the present two cents a gallon levy—for unemployment relief, in his inaugural message this month.

Opposition to this plan cropped up here, as it had in several other states, by the formation of a "highway taxpayers' association," with road builders and contractors prominent in its membership. This group announced it would battle diversion of the gasoline tax and suggested a general sales tax as an alternative to using the gas tax for unemployment work.

Governor Green immediately answered the attack by declaring it to be his opinion business men of the state would rather see gasoline taxes diverted to unemployment relief than to have an additional $2,000,000 collected from them by means of taxation.

Proponents of the diversion plan argue that Rhode Island already has an excellent system of trunk line and secondary highways—many of them of four-lane concrete construction—and the building of additional roads might well be suspended temporarily, particularly for such a purpose as relieving unemployment distress.

However, Governor Green is reported determined to force through the diversion scheme, even if he has to veto the annual appropriation bill for operation of other state departments to do it.

The estimate of a minimum of $3,000,000 to be required from the state for unemployment relief in Rhode Island during the next fiscal year was prepared by the governor's conference on employment and relief after careful study. The governor's plan, as revealed in his inaugural message, would require cities and towns receiving state unemployment relief funds from the proposed new appropriation to match the state aid, dollar for dollar, with local appropriations.

GENERAL TIRE SHOWS PROFIT OF MILLION

The General Tire and Rubber Company, in 1932, enjoyed a year of normal and satisfactory operations, with an operating profit of $1,075,546.89 after depreciation and interest, William O'Neil, president of the company, told stockholders at their annual meeting at the general offices of the company in Akron.

Reduction of the company's inventory and commitments in raw materials to market prices at the year's end, however, cut down the company's net profit for the year, after all charges, to $202,353.79, President O'Neil said. This merely represents interest, as it does little more than cover annual 6 per cent dividend requirements on outstanding preferred stock, he said.

At the end of 1932 the company's earned surplus stood at $3,329,410.44, as compared with $3,228,246.65 at the end of 1931, it is shown by the company statement based on the annual audit just completed by Price, Waterhouse & Co.

Sales for the past year amounted to $16,679,000, which was a reduction of less than 20 per cent in dollar volume from 1931, President O'Neil said. This reduction was due largely to lower prevailing prices of merchandise, he added.

General's operating profit in 1932, before depreciation, interest and special reserves, was $1,448,872.70, or more than twice the 1931 figure of $587,187.65. The company's operating profit for 1932, before special charges—$1,075,546.89—was more than four times the 1931 operating profit, before special charges—$262,503.77.

General's ratio of current assets to current liabilities was increased from five to one in 1931 to more than seven to one in 1932, President O'Neil's report showed.

The company has no bonded indebtedness of any kind and the amount of preferred stock outstanding was reduced, during 1932, from $3,228,200 to $3,161,500. Notes payable to banks were reduced, in 1932, from $1,000,000 to $350,000, President O'Neil said.

At the end of 1932 the company's balance of cash on hand or in banks was about twice as much as it owed, the report shows.

Out of the company's net profits in 1932, $117,091.75 was paid out in common and preferred dividends.

MRS. FOSTER PLANS BRIDGE COMPETITION

The Briarcliff Investment Company announces that Mrs. Annie Adair Foster, contract bridge expert and teacher of the Culbertson system, will hold a duplicate game contest in contract bridge in the 1050 Ponce de Leon dining room next Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 2:30 o'clock each day. The contest will also be continued the following week on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Mrs. Foster has selected the players for the first week. The players for the second week will be announced next Sunday. All of these players are experts in contract bridge. An electric bridge table will be given as the prize for top score.

Duplicate boards will be used to insure that all groups of players will receive the same hands. At the end of the contest the highest north and south score and the highest east and west score will cut the cards for the disposition of the electric bridge table.

Thursday's players will be Mrs. Lloyd Parks, Mrs. Howard Arnold, Mrs. George Bell and Mrs. Pearl Parks Jones. On Friday, Mrs. St. Elmo Massengale, Mrs. Paul Reid, Mrs. Garrett Evans and William Meador will play the same hand. On Saturday, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Hamilton, Baron Frederick Von Schaeffer and Mrs. Leo Balliet will play the same hand.

TUSKEGEE SINGERS WILL GIVE CONCERT IN NEW YORK FEB. 8

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—The Tuskegee Institute choir, which has just finished its month's engagement at Roxy's Radio City Music Hall, will present a concert of negro spirituals, with a few classical selections the night of February 8 in Carnegie Hall here.

The choir also will present a concert in Philadelphia the night of February 9, presented by the Philadelphia Forum as one of its season's attractions.

Dr. R. R. Moton, president of Tuskegee, will come to New York to hear his students, 50 boys and 50 girls, sing under the leadership and direction of William L. Dawson, conductor.

The choir's trip to Radio City and its concert engagements at Carnegie Hall and in Philadelphia are the result of a policy established by the late Booker T. Washington, immediately after the founding of Tuskegee Institute in 1881. This policy was to win good will for the negro through singing of the spirituals, America's only and most distinctive contribution to music. This policy has been maintained by Dr. R. R. Moton, his successor.

Cauthorn Motor Co. Showing 25th Anniversary Series Cars

An entirely new six-cylinder car mounted on a 121-inch wheelbase and equipped with a 90 horsepower engine is offered by Hupmobile for 1933. In addition, two thoroughly modernized editions of the eight-cylinder car, which featured the line for last year, are included.

These three outstanding cars, known as the Series 321, 322 and 326, provided with a wide and distinctive range of bodies, comprise one of the most interesting lines ever presented by this manufacturer. Base prices for the five-passenger four-door sedan is of $995 for the new six; $1,195 for the eight mounted on 122-inch wheelbase, and $1,445 for the 126-inch wheelbase eight. The two eights have engines developing 96 and 109 horsepower, respectively.

All Hupmobile models for 1933—the six and the two eights—are thoroughly modern and distinguished in appearance with a new advanced aerodynamic design of V-type radiator which slants smartly at the top with a graceful sweep outward at the bottom. Hoods are impressively long, with the fashionable narrow cowl. Louvres are the door type, slanting parallel to the cowl line. Exterior dual horns are chromium plated.

In introducing its new six for 1933 the Hupp Motor Car Corporation presents a car of striking value in commemoration of its twenty-fifth or silver anniversary as an automobile manufacturer. This organization with its unusual history as an independent manufacturer, rich in a background which extends into the formative years of the industry, has always cultivated a reputation for outstanding qualities in its cars. This is borne out by the unusual number of automobiles bearing its name which are actually on the road years after the average span of service of a motor car.

The new six incorporates elements of engineering design which have been developed by the Hupp Motor Car Corporation through its quarter-century of experience. Many of them are to be found solely in this make of car, while other features have been generally adopted by the industry, after having been pioneered by Hupp.

This new car is undoubtedly the greatest value that has carried the Hupp name. It is a large, roomy, fast, brilliantly performing car, powered by a modern high-compression, high-speed, high-efficiency engine. Its 121-inch wheelbase permits of body dimensions which provide all of the roominess and comfort possibly desired, yet without bulkiness.

On this interesting chassis are provided a choice of four bodies—the sedan at $995, the victoria at $1,060, cabriolet at $1,095 and a coupe with a rumble seat at $995. The exterior lines of these cars are distinctive and beautiful.

The hood carries back over the cowl, giving a modernized new appearance to this part of the car. Fenders follow closely the contour of the wheels, and the doors, suspended from the center pillar, with more than usual width at the bottom, provide easy entrance and exit to and from the cars. The hoods are high and the windshields are low and with the new form of rounded corners and the moulded one-piece windshield header unusual attractiveness is imparted to the entire line.

The upholstery is a fine grade of mohair or broadcloth. The instrument panel carries dials of airplane type, easily read and accessible. The distinctive radiator ornament enhances the front appearance of the car, and identifies it instantly.

The Hupmobile Eight.

In the 1933 models of the Hupmobile eight-cylinder cars an ever more powerful and an even more highly refined product is offered. As in 1932, there are two series of eight-cylinder cars, one mounted on a wheelbase of 122 inches and the other on a wheelbase of 126 inches. As the prices are $100 and $150 less than last year, an even greater value is offered.

By an increase of 1-16 inch bore on the 122-inch wheelbase eight the horsepower has been increased from 93 to 96. On the 126-inch car the horsepower has been increased from 106 to 109 by a bore increase of 1-8 inch. These changes together with improvements throughout the chassis have provided even higher standards of performance for these cars, which so distinguished themselves during the past year.

The Hupmobile eight-cylinder car in 1932 established for itself a reputation for its outstanding appearance and performance. This year the car has been improved in beauty and due to its more powerful engines and refinements in its chassis is even more advanced in performance.

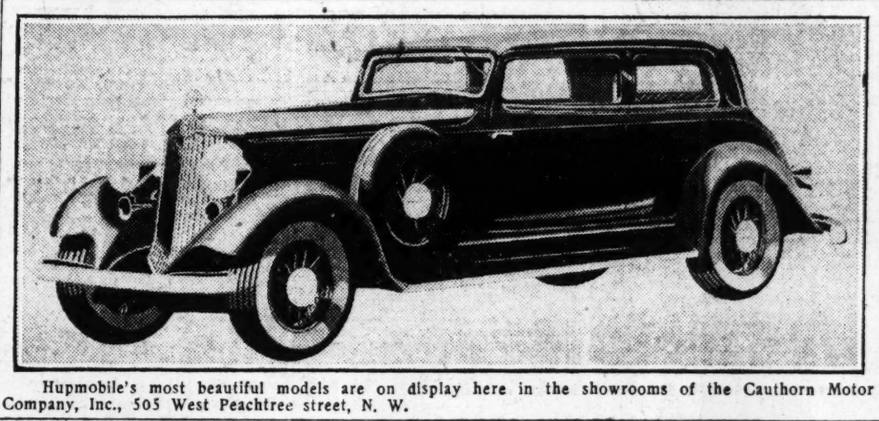

The newly rounded shape of the windshield and the new form of the front end of the body over the windshield header has resulted in a beautified body line. The hood now goes back to the rear of the cowl and there is only one large ventilator instead of two. In the sides of the hood there are doors in place of louvres and a new radiator grille which slants and sweeps forward and gives an impressive front appearance.

The engines are eight-in-line, L-head types with a bore and a stroke of 3x4 5-8 inches on the 122-inch wheelbase and 3 3-16x4 3-4 inches on the 126-inch wheelbase car. The smaller eight develops its maximum brake horsepower at 3,600 r. p. m. and the larger at 3,500 r. p. m. Both are of the high speed type with compression ratios of 5.47 to 1 and 5.34 to 1.

The Hupp Motor Car Corporation has always been distinguished for the fine appearance of its bodies and the 1933 series of eights carries forward these traditions in a fitting manner. All of the beauties of the 1932 bodies have been retained, but in addition, they have been enhanced by new lines at the windshield header and by a redesigned hood arrangement so that the hood now extends back to the base of the windshield. The attractive appearance of this new front end is further embellished by the use of doors instead of louvres in the hood.

The equipment is exceptionally complete in every detail and now there are two rear lights provided on all models. Reduced Weight of Automobiles

By J. E. FIELDS
President, the Chrysler Sales Corporation.

Ever since the beginning of the self-propelled vehicle, performance has been measured primarily by the relation of horsepower to weight, deduction of the wind resistance presented by the mass to be propelled, reduction of friction, and reduction of waste in the tranmission of power between the point where it is generated and the point where it is applied are factors in improving performance. Yet the fact remains that the mass to be moved and the energy available for moving it are the important elements measuring performance.

The automotive engineer has been vitally concerned with the reduction of weight because he has realized that for every pound he could take off a car, he would get a correspondingly better performance from any given horsepower. This theory is one of the most elementary in the mechanics of transportation.

This fact precludes the apparently simple solution of the performance problem by merely increasing horsepower through building larger engines. To do that means a more costly vehicle in the beginning and resultant larger operation costs. The corollary of increasing engine size—reducing weight—requires much greater engineering skill. It is absolutely essential that materials of necessary strength be used to insure proper factors of safety where necessary. Furthermore, the factor of safety must be kept very large because motor cars are abused and not handled by specially trained men, as are railroads and steamships.

The vast improvement in materials and fabrication of materials has been an important element in our engineering progress toward this goal. With all due respect to the vast advances we have made in design, the metallurgist has been of great assistance. We could not accomplish such results with today's designs and yesterday's materials.

The double-drop girder-truss frame of our Chrysler line is typical. This frame has a massive appearance and is in fact built to generous dimensions and at the same time is light in weight. This scientifically designed construction has cross-girders forming the X-member in the center which lead to two box sections forward and on each side. These box members, commonly known as side rails, are again joined by an extremely strong box section cross members across the front and under the radiator. This unit frame when asked to take a sudden load at one corner as caused by one wheel suddenly rising over an obstacle will offer more than 10 times the resistance to twist, as compared to the conventional yet not lightweight frame.

Think what this modern frame does toward relieving stress and strain on the car body. Here again due to modern methods and equipment combined with engineering skill Chrysler has most successfully applied steel to the car body structure. This steel construction assures maximum strength with minimum weight. Every joint is electrically welded. The modern electric flash welding of two sheets of metal is stronger at the weld than the original sheet itself, for the simple reason that the electric action at the weld refines the steel at the joint.

The reduction of weight in moving parts has been of greater importance than in removing weight in non-moving parts. Alloys have been perfected that permit us to use lighter parts such as pistons, crankshafts, axles and gears and many other things. The saving of weight in engine parts is a tremendous factor in performance. It takes a lot of horsepower to run even the finest engine with no other load than its own moving parts. Obviously, the less power that is absorbed in this manner the more you will have for useful work.

Twenty-Five to Thirty Miles Predicted for New Willys '77'

In the development of the new Willys 77, the world's lowest priced car with patented "floating power," recognized as the greatest achievement in the long career of John N. Willys, the matter of economy of operation was one of the major considerations of the engineers. The success of this concentration upon economy resulted in the final development of a car that will give the owner from 25 to 30 miles on a gallon of fuel and upwards of 1,000 miles on a gallon of oil. This oil and fuel economy is in addition to other factors of saving, which include low first cost, lower monthly payments and lower maintenance costs.

Never before in the history of the automobile has the matter of economy been more strongly stressed by the buyer. In this connection the buyer has undergone a complete reversal of buying habits. In the past he was not vitally concerned whether a car gave six or 60 miles on a gallon so long as design and performance were all that could be expected in a car at that price.

However, a national investigation disclosed that car buyers today are vitally concerned in the factor of economy. They seek a car that will give them, not only unusual economy in oil and gas consumption, but in first cost and maintenance expense as well.

The full streamline design of the car contributes to economy. Tests have disclosed that by virtue of cutting down wind resistance to a minimum, it adds from four to five miles an hour in the upper speed ranges, as compared with cars using the conventional design.

Another factor contributing to economy is the lessened weight of the Willys 77. It is 500 pounds lighter than other cars in its field and thus reduces transportation of dead weight.

This economical operation has not been achieved at a sacrifice of performance. This car has a top speed of 70 miles an hour, made in tests over a measured course and timed by a stop watch. In acceleration it fully meets all modern requirements. A second speed of 45 miles an hour gives it fine activity in making a fast getaway at traffic lights. It will accelerate from 10 to 30 miles an hour in nine seconds and from 10 to 50 miles an hour in 21 1-2 seconds.

A car with such modern performance must necessarily be equipped with highly efficient four-wheel brakes as a safety precaution. Brakes on the Willys 77 are nine inches in diameter by 1 3-4 inches wide. They are of the cable and conduit type and employ the Servo mechanism.

POSSE CAPTURED, ARMS ARE STOLEN BY BANDIT QUARRY

KANSAS CITY, Jan. 28.—(AP)—A crestfallen posse reported late today it had been captured and disarmed by three men it pursued along various highways after the trio had wounded the North Kansas City marshal and escaped with approximately $14,000 carried by a bank messenger he was guarding.

The six men said they suddenly came upon the three robbers mending a tire near Holt, Mo. A pitched battle followed. Members of the posse reported they were fired upon by two machine guns.

The trio of robbers, one wounded, overcame their pursuers, gathered up an armload of revolvers and shotguns and escaped in one of the three cars in which the citizens had overhauled them. One of the six possemen was used as a shield as the robbers took up their flight. He soon was released.

The robbers obtained the money in a sidewalk holdup of Mrs. Dorothy Tolly, bookkeeper for the National Bank & Trust Company, and Marshal Edgar Nall, who was guarding her in transfer of the currency to the post-office.

Nall was shot down when he drew a revolver.

By JOHN L. COOLEY.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Stocks found price currents drifting downward today and the list closed with a fractional average loss after two dull hours. Sales totaled only 300,075 shares.

Moderate pressure against United States Steel issues, reflecting published reports that the preferred dividend would probably be revised at next Tuesday's directors' meeting, brought a little selling in other sections of the industrial division, especially toward the close. Rails also eased, but their losses were small.

Steel preferred reacted a couple of points and the common was down a little more than 1. American Telephone and Borden, whose dividend meetings occur in the near future were rather heavy. Telephone's loss was a point. American Can, Westinghouse, Case, Goodyear, Union Pacific, United Carbon and Santa Fe also sagged in the neighborhood of a point. Otherwise, losses tended to fractions. Tobaccos still looked heavy.

The decrease in freight loadings for the week ended January 21 was 9,888 cars, total volume being 11.6 per cent under the corresponding 1932 period; a year ago, incidentally, there was a similar decline from 1931. Railroad bonds were irregular though narrowly so. Shares of New York Central, Baltimore & Ohio, Pennsylvania, Southern Pacific and Canadian Pacific averaged half a point off. Delaware & Hudson was steady. New York & Harlem, am ember of the New York Central family, jumped 2 points on a few odd lot sales.

Forecasts of steel production for next week pointed to the probability that some further improvement would be experienced. If miscellaneous orders continue to expand the effect of stagnant railroad demand will be partially dulled, though with carriers out of the market on an important scale steel plants will face a difficult handicap.

Sterling rallied the better part of a cent, but ended the week about a cent and a half under its Tuesday high. The British ambassador's call on President-elect Roosevelt, as well as his scheduled trip to England, may have influenced the advance, since speculators and others have been interested in progress of the Anglo-American debt negotiations.

TRADE TRENDS

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cretonnes—The past week's business in the primary market has been of fair volume, selling agents report. Operators have taken some large quantities, but most jobbers and retailers continue to buy sparingly.

Alcohol—Reduced demand from the anti-freeze trade and presence of large stocks in second hands have led to reports of a possible downward revision in price schedules covering deliveries over the second quarter.

Pig Iron—Sales in this district continue to run at about 700 tons weekly, compared with 2,000 weekly a year ago.

Towels—Trade authorities say that a large part of the stock goods at mills slated for clearance has been disposed of, promising relief from recent price confusion.

Silk—The trade hears that the Susquehanna silk mills will close four of its plants for a week, beginning Monday because of a lull in buying resulting from restricted operations in a section of the dress manufacturing industry.

By VICTOR EUBANK.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Weakness of German issues, following the resignation of Chancellor Von Schleicher as head of the cabinet, was an unsettling factor in the bond market today and prices generally failed to make any progress.

Trading activity was little more than normal for a Saturday short session, sales totlaing $6,123,000, par value. The average for 60 domestic corporate loans was unchanged. On the week, however, this average was up three-tenths of a point at 71

Although selling of the Germans was of small volume, losses ranging from fractions to more than 4 points were suffered by the Reich 5 1-2s and 7s, together with leading state, municipal and corporate bonds. Other foreign loans were irregular.

Improved net operating incomes for December of a number of the important carriers failed to spur the rails to higher levels and the average for this group actually lost three-tenths of a point. Declines of more than 2 points in some of the Canadian issues were believed to have reflected uncertainties surrounding the dominion's transportation problems. Moderate gains, however, were recorded by some loans of Santa Fe, Baltimore & Ohio, Bangor & Aroostook, Delaware & Hudson, Kansas City Southern, Missouri Pacific, Reading, Iron Mountain, Texas & Pacific and Union Pacific.

Highest grade utilities steadied, as did some of the industrials. An equity receivership for the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, following one for the Paramount-Publix, further depressed most amusement company bonds. Losses of fractions to more than a point were suffered by maturities of Keith Corporation, Loew's, Paramount-Publix, Paramount Famous Lasky, R-K-O, and Warner Bros. Transactions in this section, though, were rather light. United Drug 5s recovered 1 3-8. Silesian American 7s were up 2 5-8 and Bethlehem Steel refunding 5s and American & Foreign Power 5s gained a point each.

United States government issues were dull and slightly mixed.

DIVIDEND REDUCTION SEEN FOR U. S. STEEL

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Wall Street's interest in the dividend meeting of the directors of the United States Steel Corporation next Tuesday was heightened today, when it was stated in authoritative sources that the public should be prepared for a change in the $7 annual rate on the preferred shares.

It was felt in Wall Street banking quarters that public sentiment should not be much affected by a reduction in the dividend, in view of the fact that recent payments have been entirely from surplus, at a time when large losses were being reported.

Six months ago, directors warned that improvement in business would be essential if the dividend was to be continued, but since then, the company has shown large deficits. Dividends on the stock are cumulative, so any reduction in payments at this time will have to be made up later. The $1.75 quarterly payments have been made regularly since formation of the company in 1901.

SOUTHERN RAILROADS CUT VEGETABLE RATES

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Reduced rates on vegetables and citrus fruits between points in the south and southeast today were authorized by the interstate commerce commission in an effort to permit the railroads to meet truck competition.

The new rates which were asked by the carriers will become effective on "short notice."

The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, the Seaboard Airline Railroad Company and the Southern railway asked the reduction which amounts to approximately 15 per cent from the current rates.

Among the reductions the agent for the carriers listed the following:

Orlando, Fla., to Atlanta, Ga., from $1.01 per 100 pounds to 82 cents.

Miami to Birmingham, from $1.11 to 99 cents; Tampa to Charleston, 73 cents to 65 cents; St. Augustine to Nashville, 76 cents to 69 cents; Gainesville, Fla., to Charlotte, 47 cents to 39 cents; Brunswick, Ga., to Birmingham, 53 cents to 50 cents; Albany, Ga., to Durham, N. C., 62 cents to 45 cents, and Jacksonville, Fla., to Mobile, 47.5 cents to 41 cents.

INCREASE IS SHOWN IN STEEL PRODUCTION

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—(AP)—All metals were quiet this week, but zinc quotations displayed further easiness in the continued absence of buying interest.

Tin was steadier, owing largely to advances at London and strength in sterling exchange. Differences in buyers' and sellers' views checked business.

Demand for steel increased moderately from miscellaneous sources and, combined with sustained buying from automobile manufacturers, it was reflected by further gradual expansion in ingot production to an estimated 17 per cent of capacity. Substantial orders for tubular goods developed late in the week, but railroads continued to withhold purchases. The price situation was confused following recent declines. Pig iron was quiet and steady.

Copper remained dull and unchanged at 5 cents for electrolytic delivered.

Lead held steady. Orders placed for February delivery are reported to be relatively small thus far.

Antimony was dull. The Chinese New Year holidays accounting for quietness.

Increase in Income Reported by Southern

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—(AP)—The Southern Railway Company today reported a net operating income for December of $1,362,408, an increase of $1,012,608 over the $349,800 reported for the same month in 1931.

Gross revenue for the road in December was $6,046,176, compared with $6,813,301 a year ago.

The Southern was among 19 roads out of the first 36 reporting to show an increase in net operating income.

MISSOURI PACIFIC PLANS $10,000,000 BOND ISSUE

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—The Missouri Pacific Railroad Company today was authorized by the interstate commerce commission to issue $10,000,000 of its 1917 first and refunding mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds, Series I.

The authorization permits the company to have the Guaranty Trust Company, of New York, trustee for the mortgage, validate and deliver bonds to be pledged with the Reconstruction Corporation for a loan of $8,800,000, which has just been approved, and to pledge any remaining equity with the Railroad Credit Corporation as security for loans from that organization.

GAIN IN BUSINESS REPORTED BY A. C. L.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Considerable improvement in its business was revealed today by the Atlantic Coast Line railroad in its monthly report of revenues.

Net profits for December amounted to $546,032, as compared to $521,746 in December, 1931. In November, 1932, net profit was $76,504, as compared with a net deficit of $118,094 in October. The net for December 1930, was $686,527.

BUREAU OF MARKETS SHOWS BIG HOG SALES

Sale of more than half a million pounds of hogs and 37,897 pounds of poultry, through the state bureau of markets since January 1 was announced today by J. W. Rountree, director of the bureau.

He said 3,153 head of hogs, weighing 586,646 pounds, had been sold for a total of $13,462, and 37,897 pounds of poultry for $3,325, in sales in which the bureau co-operated. Miscellaneous sales of $514 were reported.

FREIGHT LOADINGS DECREASE IN WEEK

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—The American Railway Association announced today that loadings of revenue freight for the week ending January 21 were 496,434 cars, a decrease of 9,888 over the preceding week but 65,667 cars below the same week of 1932 and 219,040 cars below the same period in 1931.

Mills Attacks Inflation As First Step to Chaos

By OGDEN L. MILLS,
Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The precipitous fall in prices that has taken place during the course of the last three years has given rise to all manner of economic maladjustments. The price levels, not only for commodities, but for rents, services, etc., are so out of line, both in domestic and world markets as to reduce to a minimum the exchange of commodities, out of the production and exchange of which the civilized world makes a living and derives its wealth.

As price relationships become distorted so that exchange of goods does not proceed freely, production soon exceeds consumption and is increasingly dammed up. Prices fall further. Commercial and industrial stagnation follow and we are confronted with the paradox of poverty in the midst of plenty.

Major Premise in Error.

In the meanwhile, with an enormously contracted volume of business and a much lower price level, the burden of payments on debts piled up during the preceding period of expansion and high business activity becomes unbearable. Debtors of all classes, governments, corporations, and individuals seek relief from a weight that has become crushing.

Since depressed, disordered and declining prices appear on the surface at least to be the most disturbing factor affecting trade and industry, and since prices are expressed in terms of money, which is the medium through which the exchange of goods is effected, there is a very natural tendency to look upon our currency system as the key to the situation and to jump to the conclusion that currency can be so manipulated as to relieve the only too obvious ills from which the world is suffering.

This is the basis for the talk of inflation of which we hear so much these days. In its crudest form, inflation is visualized as the process of pumping out currency in one way or another, the assumed effect of which rests on the simple conception that the level of prices will have a fixed relationship to the volume of currency in circulation.

But this conception, even as applied to "money" in the broadest sense, is altogether too simple. Money in the modern world consists of currency only to a very small extent. Money, particularly in the United States, consists of credit of all kinds, but principally of that form of credit known as a bank deposit. Currency in circulation amounts to less than $5,600,000,000; bank deposits to about $43,000,000,000.

World Market Is Factor.

But even the volume of bank credit does not tell the whole story, for if we would relate money or credit to prices we have to take into consideration the further factor of the rate at which that credit is used, or the velocity of the turnover, for two dollars that are used once during the year obviously do more work in moving merchandise than does one dollar used twice during a year.

Moreover, we do not live in a self-contained country segregated from the rest of the world. Our prices, currency and credit structure are directly related to and affected by the situation in world markets where our goods are exchanged for the goods of the rest of the world through the medium of international credit mechanism.

The freedom of exchange and the prices at which exchanges of our goods are effected are, therefore, influenced by the relationship between our money and the currencies of other countries, expressed in terms of dollars.

It is apparent, therefore, in the first place that we are dealing with something more complicated than could be reached by a mere expansion of currency.

Volume Is Main Need.

In the second place, assuming we could bring about at will an increase in the volume and velocity of credit in use and that a general rise in prices might ensue, there is nothing to indicate that this process, of itself, would restore a proper relationship between the prices for different commodities or groups of commodities. In fact, it is conceivable that it might increase the maladjustment.

I am convinced that we are suffering today from a downward movement of prices and from the unevenness of this movement, as well as from the low level of prices. It is distorted price relationships which retard production and obstruct the exchange of commodities and thus result in a tremendously restricted volume of business. If the volume of production and business could be brought back to normal, even at a comparatively low price level, many payments on debts would once more become bearable and the debts themselves could in time be liquidated.

It must be admitted, of course, that there are many debts that must be written down or off, unless prices can be brought to a higher level. I make this point in order to indicate that even if it lay within our power to bring about, through some inflationary process, much higher price levels for all commodities, services, etc., this, of itself, would not cure the situation so long as the maladjustments continue.

Nine Billions Possible.

This does not mean that I do not believe it highly desirable that prices should rise. I do, most emphatically. I also believe that an ample supply of "money," or credit readily obtainable for both long and short time at low interest rates, is an important factor in bringing about that rise; not because ample credit readily obtainable will, of itself, produce high prices, but because that credit working through other economic factors is an essential condition for increase in the volume of business transactions and thus in prices.

This gives rise to a third point. What reason is there to believe that under our present domestic monetary system and policy the necessary amount of potential credit is lacking? Our stock of gold, the basis upon which our credit structure rests, is greater now than in 1929, and would obviously sustain at least an equal amount of bank credit. The member banks alone have $600,000,000 more reserves than the law requires, and could expand their credit by $9,000,000,000 without borrowing an additional cent from the federal reserve banks.

Bringing this credit into use, however, is apparently a very different question; the actual volume of bank credit is much smaller than three years ago; the velocity of bank deposits has been greatly reduced; and the estimated volume of business and financial transactions in this country in dollars at current prices during the year 1932 has been less than 45 per cent of the 1929 volume.

What May Be Result?

This brings us to the real issue. I believe that while it is necessary that easy money conditions should be maintained, the remedy will be found in a series of steps and readjustments calculated to remove the barriers that now stand in the way of the production and exchange of goods, and that as commerce and industrial activity expand credit will simultaneously be sucked into use and prices will rise. The inflationists, on the other hand, seek by arbitrary governmental action to force an immediate and wholesale expansion of currency which they believe will force a rise in prices that will in turn be followed by increased business activity.

Three questions may fairly be asked: First, have they diagnosed the disease correctly? Secondly, can they accomplish even the limited objective of relief to debtors and stimulation to business? And third, are not the conditions which they will ultimately create likely to be infinitely worse than those from which we now seek to escape? The first two questions, as we have seen, must be answered in the negative; the third, most emphatically in the affirmative.

While there are many, many schemes for increasing prices through currency manipulation, generally speaking, they fall into two classes.

The first consists in direct or indirect inflation through budgetary deficits, governmental expenditures being arbitrarily increased for this purpose. Various public work schemes and the Patman bill to pay a soldiers' bonus by issuance of $2,000,000,000 of new money and a number of devices for debasing the value of the dollar by more direct action, of which the proposal to reduce the gold content may be singled out as representative, though they include a number of other plans such as the free coinage of silver at a 16-to-1 ratio, have been advanced.

As I understand it, the justification for the latter proposal is based on the claim that the rate of growth of the world's gold supply has failed to keep pace with the world's production of goods, and that the scramble of the countries of the world for an inadequate supply of gold has led inevitably to an increased valuation of gold and a decreased valuation of goods, or to falling prices.

Gold Is Not the Cause.

The accuracy of the contention that the rise in the value of gold has resulted from the failure over a period of years of the stock of monetary gold to keep pace with incerasing production of goods may be questioned on the basis of very strong evidence.

However, the point does not seem particularly significant in the present discussion. It is clear that the precipitous decline in prices that has taken place since 1929 cannot be attributed to a gold shortage. The gold reserves of central banks and governments of some 47 countries representing the bulk of the world's stock of monetary gold aggregated in the summer of 1929 about $10,145,000,000, and at the end of 1932 nearly $12,000,000,000.

If the distribution of this gold among the countries of the world is not to the best advantage, this is an indication of other factors at work, but certainly not proof of a shortage of gold.

Moreover, in spite of the disappointing failure of the gold standard to function satisfactorily among the disorders of the last few years, I have not the least doubt but that if we could again achieve order and balance in the world's production and trade, which are conditions of stability and growth, and if we could get the world once more back on the gold standard and stabilize exchanges, central bank managers have acquired knowledge and skill to make more economic use of the gold than ever before, so as to make this gold a sufficient base for a volume of credit which would finance all our activities on a much higher price level than exists today.

Dollar Only a Token.

The rise in the value of gold in terms of which many attempt to explain the recent world-wide decline of commodity prices might better be thought of as primarily the reflection of world-wide disorders which have curtailed production, markets and trade and have disturbed, and in many cases completely paralyzed the normal functioning of our credit and exchange mechanism.

Gold Abandonment Tragedy.

But the heart of the position of the advocates of revaluation of the dollar is the claim that the reduction of the value of the dollar, regardless of what had caused its rise, would bring about a rise of domestic prices corresponding to the devaluation. Such a contention should be subjected to the most careful scrutiny before being accepted at its face value.

If the United States were shut off from the rest of the world so as to be completely self-contained without any outside relationships of any kind, cutting the gold content of the dollar in half of itself would have no direct effect on the price structure. It must be assumed, therefore, that the rise in domestic prices is intended to be brought about indirectly by the rise of prices expressed in terms of dollars of goods sold in world markets.

But no one can predict with assurance that this would happen. Our devaluation of the dollar would introduce a major disturbing element in the worldwide disorder of exchanges. I am inclined to believe that what would happen would be a further depression in world prices, accompanied by a slight increase in domestic prices, providing other factors were not at once projected into the field.

It is not unreasonable to suppose that such action on our part would pull those countries still on the gold standard off the gold standard; that present disordered exchanges would become more chaotic; that currencies would tend to depreciate either intentionally or by necessity still further; that trade barriers would rise still higher; that international trade would become further restricted; that world prices would fall lower, and that the combined effect on world confidence would bring in the train of such developments literally incalculable calamities.

Britain's Prices Still Low.

It must not be forgotten that this action would involve deliberate default on the part of the United States government on its own obligations, accompanied by a compulsory default of all those obligations that are payable in gold dollars of the present standard. Repudiation by the United States government and breach of contracts coming at such a time as this, might well destroy the foundation of our entire economic structure and postpone indefinitely all possibility of world recovery. This is a high price to pay for a problematical and, at best, limited increase in prices.

The cases of Italy, France and Great Britain cannot be cited as examples. In all three devaluation was brought about by the compulsion of events and not by deliberate choice. In the first two cases legal enactment represented merely a recognition of an existing state of facts. Moreover, those who so confidently claim that debasement of our currency would be followed by a rise in domestic prices can find but cold comfort in the price history of Great Britain since September, 1931, for whereas the gold value of the pound sterling had depreciated from $4.86 to $3.26, as of November, 1932, the index of prices in England was only two points higher than in September, 1931.

As I have said, the other main group of plans for increasing prices by currency manipulation contemplate inflation brought about by the piling up of large governmental deficits that cannot be met through normal borrowing operations, or through the more powerful method of resort to the printing and issuance of paper dollars without adequate gold reserve back of them.

Under the first of these, the government must inevitably resort to the central banks of issue. They, not acting on their own volition but by government compulsion, are driven to provide the basis for a credit increase. Such a procedure was resorted to during the war. In fact, many of our agricultural troubles today are directly traceable to the war-time inflation of prices of agricultural products and land.

French Franc Ruined.

The best example, however, is furnished by the course of events in France after the war. The French government, faced with recurring deficits, turned to the Bank of France. The government gave its notes to the bank. The bank, in turn, gave its bank notes to the government. They were paid out by the government to meet current expenditures. The procedure reduced the value of the franc from 19 cents to 2 cents, and threatened a major disaster which was only just averted by bringing the inflation under control.

Under the second and more powerful method of inflation, the United States government would issue a paper dollar which would have no value except for the say so of the government. It will be urged, of course, that the promise of the United States government is worth a great deal. It is, under ordinary circumstances, and when the government conducts its business with prudence and in accordance with the dictates of sound financial policy. But if the government of the United States should undertake to print and pass out "say so" money it would at once destroy confidence in all United States currency.

The people know that greenbacks depreciated to 35 per cent of their face value. They know that the "say so" marks printed by the German government depreciated from a value of 24 cents to zero. They know that once the United States embarks on this course United States currency is going at once to depreciate in value.

What would happen? It should be recognized that the bad effects of such currency issues would be immediate and would occur even if the issues were moderate in amount. But in order to have an effect on prices the issues would have to be of very large dimensions. So long as our currency was redeemable in gold every holder of currency, everyone with a bank balance, every foreigner with balance in this country, or American securities, would at once convert them into gold. In a very short while our gold stock would approach exhaustion. We would be obliged to suspend gold payment.

Would Wash Out Savings.

We would then find ourselves on an irredeemable paper currency basis. A currency that, as the vicious spiral of inflation circled upward, would constantly decrease in value.

The first effect would be to enormously diminish the value of all savings. Every man and woman whose savings were deposited in savings banks, or which took the form of insurance policies, or are represented by investments in bonds or mortgages, other than those payable in gold, would find their savings and their income from those savings correspondingly reduced.

Prices and the cost of living would rise very rapidly.

While wages and salaries would also rise, they would lag behind so that though business would in the early stages be stimulated, and to that extent unemployment relieved, the wage earning and salaried classes would find themselves involved in a situation from which there would be no escape, with their real wages and standards of living falling steadily. Production, stimulated by rising prices, would increase rapidly. But with the decreased purchasing power of the fixed income and of the wage earning classes there would soon develop a serious maladjustment which would eventually result in collapse.

The farmer would appear, in the first instance, to be the gainer. If his mortgage were not payable in gold, he could pay it off in cheap currency. Rising prices would be reflected in what he received for his products. But the rise in the price of what he must buy would soon offset the gains. Furthermore, as the values of farm land rose through the process of inflation, new debts would be incurred at the higher levels, and when the final crash came the farmer would find himself worse off than ever, with a much heavier burden of debt and his markets destroyed.

All Classes Ruined.

While inflation at some stages in the process and at some points appears to correct some of the evils arising during a period of deflation, the one outstanding characteristic of the movement is that once started it soon becomes completely out of control and pursues an irresistible course until it collapses.

All experience teaches that whatever the earlier appearance may be, all classes are ultimately adversely affected by the process of inflation and eventually it results in ruin to the economic life of a nation and brings terrible disaster to all of its people.

There is an alternative program, which I have not the space to do more than outline. If I were in a position to frame a program, it would take substantially the following form: First, a balanced budget; second, an easy money policy consistently pursued by the principal central banks; third, a definite attack on the debt problem, not by wholesale treatment, but by setting up adequate machinery to deal with different categories of debt; fourth, a settlement of the foreign debt question; fifth, a stabilization of world exchanges by a return in the first instance to the gold standard by the more important commercial and industrial countries; sixth, the lifting of arbitrary trade barriers.

I believe that if these measures were carried through in a broad and constructive spirit, the stimulus to world economy would be so great that there would be an immediate response in the way of an industrial and commercial expansion and a marked increase in prices, accompanied gradually by essential readjustment.

Bank Closes.

CONWAY, Ark., Jan. 28.—(AP)—The Bank of Conway, the city's only remaining banking institution, failed to open today. A notice on the door signed by Examiner H. A. Daugherty said the state banking department had taken over the affairs of the institution.

Odd Record.

Mrs. and Mrs. J. S. Carnelson, of Cheney, Kan., and their four sons believe they hold the state record for distance in attending church. Each Sunday the family drives a total of 56 miles to attend services.

Sidewalks of New York Author Is Befriended

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—(AP)—The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers announced today that it would pay James W. Blake $25 a week for the rest of his life in recognition of his best-known contribution to the popular song industry—the words of "The Sidewalks of New York."

Two weeks ago it was discovered that Blake, out of a job for a year, was penniless. He was immediately given assistance by the emergency unemployment relief committee.

Blake wrote his song more than 30 years ago and the composers' society was not organized until 1914. But today the board of directors elected him a member and voted to care for him the rest of his life. He is now 76.

B. Y. P. U. To Observe 20th Anniversary Tuesday Night

Some prominent speakers and a musician who will appear on the program of the twentieth anniversary B. Y. P. U. dinner to be held at Davison-Paxon's tea room Tuesday night at 6 o'clock. This dinner celebrates the twentieth anniversary of the organization of the Georgia B. Y. P. U. department and will be attended by some 500 young people from Atlanta and over the state. From left to right those appearing above are: Frank H. Leavell, of Nashville, Tenn., head of Baptist student work of the south and first secretary of the Georgia B. Y. P. U. department; Miss Elizabeth Jackson, of Atlanta, student at Shorter College, who will be heard in a violin solo during the banquet program, and James W. Merritt, of Atlanta, executive secretary of the Georgia Baptist convention and past president of the Georgia B. Y. P. U. convention.

Atlanta young people will act as hosts at the twentieth anniversary B. Y. P. U. dinner to be held at Davison-Paxon's tea room Tuesday night. Young people from every section of Georgia and denominational leaders from over the south are expected to be present as the banquet gets under way at 6 o'clock. The celebration marks the twentieth year since the Georgia Baptist convention assumed an obligation for the training of the young Christians in the churches by establishing a state B. Y. P. U. department.

Georgia was the first state east of the Mississippi river to provide for the organization of a state B. Y. P. U. department to promote the training of young Christians. Frank H. Leavell, now of Nashville, Tenn., and serving as the leader of Southern Baptist student work, was the first secretary of this department, taking office February 1, 1913.

Organizations Scattered.

On coming into office Mr. Leavell found 44 unions scattered over the state and having 1,000 enrolled. Some of those mentioned as doing good work during the first year are First church, Rome; Canton, Jackson, Bainbridge and Moultrie.

The number of organizations has grown now to nearly 2,400 with some 55,000 people enrolled.

As early as September, 1895, there were B. Y. P. U. organizations in some few of the churches over Georgia, but not until that time was there a state convention organized. Meeting in Macon in September of that year a group of leading pastors and young people organized the Georgia B. Y. P. U. convention with Dr. J. L. White, now pastor of the First Baptist church, of Miami, Fla., as the first president.

Two months later the young people and their friends from over the south met in Atlanta on the occasion of the Cotton States Exposition to form the first southwide B. Y. P. U. organization. Dr. L. O. Dawson, recently president of Howard College, Birmingham, Ala., was named the first president and W. W. Gaines was chosen secretary of the body.

Recognition Slow.

The B. Y. P. U. work, however, received no official recognition on the part of the Georgia Baptist convention until the fall of 1912, when the need for promotion of this training service for young people was seen and provision made for the employment of a state B. Y. P. U. secretary to lead in the work.

Dr. J. Ellis Sammons, who is now president of the Georgia Baptist convention and pastor of the Vineville Baptist church, Macon, was president of the state convention in 1913. Since that time the following have been president of the state B. Y. P. U. convention: Rev. J. L. White, J. J. Whitfield, Dr. M. L. Brittain, Rev. Robert Van DeVenter, R. C. Norman, J. E. Howell, Dr. William Russell Owen, Dr. Sammons, James W. Merritt, who is now executive secretary-treasurer of the Georgia Baptist convention; Carlton W. Binns, Dr. Walter P. Binns, Judge Frank A. Hooper Jr. and Dr. T. Baron Gibson.

Those who have served as state B. Y. P. U. secretary are: Frank H. Leavell, nine years; H. Lewis Batts, two years; Robert Connally, one year; Channing P. Hayes, nine months, and Edwin S. Preston, the present secretary, seven years.

Prominent Speakers.

The twentieth anniversary dinner will have as its speakers the following: Dr. Fred Brown, of Knoxville, Tenn., president of the Southern Baptist convention; Dr. J. Ellis Sammons, of Macon, president of the Georgia Baptist convention; E. E. Lee, of Dallas, Texas, southwide B. Y. P. U. field worker; Frank H. Leavell, of Nashville, Tenn.; James W. Merritt, of Atlanta, executive secretary of the Georgia Baptist convention; J. J. Whitfield, past state president of the Georgia B. Y. P. U. convention; Dr. M. L. Brittain, president of Georgia Tech and past state B. Y. P. U. president; Carlton W. Binns and Judge Frank A. Hooper Jr., Atlanta attorneys, and Dr. T. Baron Gibson, present presiding officer of the state B. Y. P. U. convention.

Among the features of the banquet program will be musical numbers by Miss Elizabeth Jackson, of Atlanta, a student at Shorter College, Rome; Miss Jewell McNair, a quartet composed of Mrs. Gerald A. Mitchell, Miss Lillian Smith, Ray Nixon and T. Stanley Perry, accompanied by Mrs. John Felder, and a trio of young ladies from Bessie Tift College, Forsyth.

"Old-Timers'" Table.

An "old-timers'" table in charge of Mrs. Charles W. Outlaw will be a feature group at the dinner, since many who have been active in B. Y. P. U. work in previous years will renew fellowship then.

The anniversary dinner will serve to announce the B. Y. P. U. "better speakers" contest over the state during the first six months of 1933 on the subject, "How My B. Y. P. U. Can Promote the Program of Christ." Detailed announcement will also be made of the thirty-ninth annual convention and fifth annual encampment which is to be held at Rome and Shorter College, June 8-17.

Allen To Head Commission For Georgia at Chicago Fair

Talmadge Announces Full State Committee to Represent Empire State at Big Event.

Governor Eugene Talmadge Saturday announced that plans are being made for Georgia to participate in the Century of Progress International Exposition to be held at Chicago from June 1 to November 1 of this year.

Governor Talmadge added that Scott W. Allen, of Atlanta, has been appointed chairman of the Georgia Century of Progress commission authorized by the legislature last year. Mr. Allen already has accepted this appointment and the governor states that this fact alone practically assures success to Georgia's exhibit at Chicago, as the interest Mr. Allen has manifested during the past 20 years in building a greater Georgia is evidence that he is interested in his state to the extent that he will see that Georgia is properly represented.

The complete commission was announced as follows:

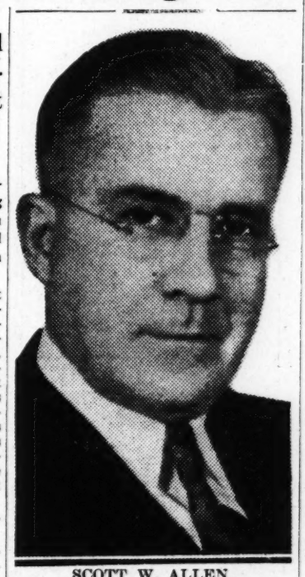

Governor Eugene Talmadge, chairman ex-officio, Atlanta; Scott W. Aller, chairman, Atlanta; Roy LeCraw, vice chairman, Atlanta; Miss Hattie Hardy, Albany; J. F. McCrackin, Valdosta; Russell K. Whitman, Atlanta; Wiley L. Moore, Atlanta; William Mac Davis, Macon; Clark Howell, Atlanta; J. Ralston Cargill, Columbus; Dr. George Brown, Atlanta; Peter S. Twitty, Atlanta; S. W. McCallie, Atlanta; John Brice, Atlanta; Herbert Porter, Atlanta; Z. W. Copeland, Elberton; Norman Elsas, Atlanta; V. J. Slaughter, Rome; Virgil W. Shepard, Atlanta; George Reynolds, Atlanta; A. O. V. Bailey, Savannah; J. C. Robinson, Atlanta.

Chairman Allen recently made a trip to Chicago and inspected in detail the set-up of the Century of Progress Exposition. He states that from the activity going on there at this time through different business interests throughout the world he is convinced this exposition will be the most outstanding ever held in the history of the United States.

Mr. Allen said it is safely estimated that over 50,000,000 people will attend this exposition and that it really offers Georgia an opportunity to show to the world what she has in natural advantage, agricultural and manufacturing resources.

"In arranging for Georgia's participation in this exposition, no special interest or business will be represented. The idea will be to present Georgia as a unit, allowing each county, city and group to make the exhibit a success by contributing in a small way," said Mr. Allen.

Georgia's exhibit will be held in what is known as the States building. Up to date more than 38 states in the Union have contracted for their space, and their exhibits are already being prepared. Our sister states such as South Carolina, Florida, Mississippi, Tennessee and Alabama are already constructing their exhibits.

SCOTT W. ALLEN.

Chairman Allen is well known throughout the state through his connection with L. W. Rogers, Inc., for the past 32 years and the position which he holds as president of that company gives him a contact throughout Georgia that should be more than helpful in his work.

A meeting of the full commission will be held at an early date at which time more detailed plans and arrangements will be made as to Georgia's participation in the Century of Progress Exposition.

Inspectors To Watch For Postoffice Thefts

Employes in Atlanta's new $2,000,000 postoffice building, which will be completed by the first of next year, will work under the watchful eyes of postal inspectors who will use secret passages on the lower floors for regular rounds of inspection. Narrow slits, hidden by blinds, will be inserted in passageways six feet high and three feet wide, according to postal officials.

Inspectors use such passages in the present postal building to watch for thefts in the mail and at no time are the inspectors permitted to check up on laxity of duty.

Legation Structure Is Threatened by Fire

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—A fire in the Czecho-Slovakian legation threatened the center of the fashionable diplomatic residential section today and destroyed the roof and part of the third floor of the legation before being brought under control.

All occupants of the building escaped safely.

The fire started in the attic and broke through the roof at several spots simultaneously.

Fanned by a high wind, it threatened to spread to some of the residences near by. Two firemen were taken to a hospital to be treated for injuries before the fire was brought under control.

Minister Veverka was attending a meeting of an advertising club when informed of the fire.

SPOT FOR POOL FOR ROOSEVELT BELIEVED FOUND

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—White House aides believe they have found an ideal spot for a swimming tank for President-elect Roosevelt.

The house appropriations committee has included a $50,000 item in the independent offices supply bill that would cover such a project, but there are a couple of "ifs" in the situation—final congressional approval and word from Mr. Roosevelt himself.

The spot that has caught the eye of attaches as a likely "swimming hole" is now a reflecting pool in a secluded spot beside the east wing, which stretches from the White House proper toward the treasury department.

The pool would have to be deepened and virtually remade, and being outdoors probably would have to be glass-enclosed to allow Mr. Roosevelt year-around exercise. An opening easily could be made from it to the east wing, however, placing it within easy access of the living quarters of the mansion.

AMNESIA VICTIM FOR TWO DECADES SEEKS IDENTITY

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 28.—(AP)—A tall gray-haired man, who said his name is Edgar G. Allen, believed to be a victim of amnesia for 22 years, was held here today awaiting arrival Sunday of relatives from Ridgewood, N. J., to identify him.

The man told officers he was walking along a street here yesterday when he suddenly remembered his name was Edgar G. Allen. He said he had a sister, Mrs. Grace Dykens, in Ridgewood. He told police he sent a telegram to his relatives.

Safety Director Walter Anderson received a telephone call from relatives of a long-lost Edgar Allen in Ridgewood asking him to investigate. He furnished them with a description and was told, he said, that it fitted that of the missing man.

Anderson said he was informed that L. C. Allen, a brother, and Roscoe Allen, a son, would come to Knoxville to determine if the man held is actually Edgar G. Allen.

The man told Anderson he didn't remember where he had been during the 22 years, nor what he had been doing. He was registered at a Knoxville hotel under the name of E. G. Allen and had a small amount of stationery from the Kimball hotel in Atlanta in his pocket.

Clerks at the Kimball House said Saturday they knew no one named Edgar G. Allen and that no such person had been registered there recently.

MOTHER ENDS LIFE, EMULATING DAUGHTER

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Mrs. E. W. Walters, whose daughter recently committed suicide after killing an invalid son, was found shot to death today, and officers said she took her own life.

Search for Mrs. Walters had been under way since she disappeared from her home Wednesday. Relatives said she had worried over her health, and the death of her daughter, Mrs. Le Grande Boyette, in December. Mrs. Boyette was found dead beside her fatally wounded child in December, and officers said she shot the boy before taking her own life.

Mrs. Walters body was found in a field on the outskirts of the county. She apparently had been dead about 24 hours.

MISTRIAL DECLARED IN EXTORTION CASE

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Jan. 28.—(AP)—A mistrial was declared today in the case of Charles Herbert Young, charged with attempting to extort $10,000 from Homer L. Ferguson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Company.

7 PERSONS ROBBED; 4 SUSPECTS JAILED

Gypsy Trio Hold Up Filling Station; Truck Driver Reports Loss of $128.

Police reports Saturday night showed a new wave of holdups, with three Gypsies committing one and white men and negroes engaging in the others.

W. H. Ogburn, 706 Lee street, a driver for the Star Provision company, reported that a white man jumped onto his truck at Lovejoy and Alexandria streets and rode to Williams street where, at the point of a pistol, he robbed Ogburn of $128.

F. P. Shoupe, operator of a filling station at 619 West Peachtree, was the victim of the Gypsies. He said two women and a man drove up in a big sedan and that the man covered him with a pearl handled pistol while the women robbed him of $5.

Four negroes entered the grocery store of F. Seldman, at Randolph and Houston streets, and robbed him of $25. One of the four fired at Seldman as they left but the bullet went wild, he told police.

Two armed negroes who held up George Arrington, of the Fulton pharmacy on Washington street on the corner of Clark and Washington streets late Saturday night and robbed him of $1.50, were arrested by radio patrolmen within two minutes after the holdup. They gave the names of Richard Johnson, 19, 638 Rhodes street, and John London, 16, 642 Foundry street. Police believe them implicated in holdups reported earlier.

Mrs. P. W. Patterson, 250 Forrest avenue, said a negro snatched her purse containing $21.25, gloves and keys, at Butler street and Edgewood avenue.

Two drunken negroes, E. W. Childrey, operator of a tailor shop at 332 Woodward avenue, reported, entered his place and one attempted to pull a gun. Childrey ran them out, called police and then joined them in the chase. Sydney Russell and Legree Russell were arrested after Russell had attempted to draw his gun on the officers. Both were held on suspicion.

W. J. Brown, furniture collector, reported that he eluded six white men who attempted to hold him up at 1163 Garibaldi street by ducking into a house close by.

Grady Dean, of College Park, told police he was held up on Central avenue, near Trinity avenue, by two armed white men and robbed of $35 in cash.

A negro woman who went to the home of Mrs. Cliff Warr, 121 West Peachtree place, and asked for a cup of coffee, snatched Mrs. Warr's purse, containing $9, while the coffee was being prepared.

Hit by Police Machine, Woman Badly Injured

Struck by a motorcycle ridden by a policeman, Mrs. Katie Ashworth, 63, of 384 Luckie street, received a broken right leg and was admitted to Grady hospital early Sunday morning, according to police reports.

Mrs. Ashworth was struck by Motorcycle Patrolman George Richardson, on Decatur street near Pratt, as she attempted to cross the street. She was knocked to the pavement and was bruised about the body.

ROAD, SCHOOL FUNDS ARE GIVEN COUNTIES

State Treasurer M. L. Ledford Saturday reported a quarterly payment to counties of the state for roads and bridges of $482,279 and a monthly payment of $178,140 to schools.

These payments, together with $500,000 to the state highway department, came from funds collected through the gasoline tax, Mr. Ledford said.

Bibb, Clarke, Chatham, Muscogee and Richmond received the largest amounts for roads and bridges, while Fulton county, which received $1,875, got the largest amount from the equalization fund for schools.

ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 29, 1933.

'Rog' Kiley Hasn't Alderman's 'Figger' But Expects To Be Elected.

Roger Kiley, assistant Auburn coach and Chicago lawyer, is running for the office of alderman of the thirty-seventh ward in Chicago.

ROGER KILEY.

And Roger is built like a shad—not the figure for an alderman.

But this means that all the football coaches and Auburn alumni and football reporters from the Southeastern conference can go to the thirty-seventh ward and defy the coppers.

"The Alderman is a friend of mine—call Alderman Kiley."

I can't wait to go to Chicago and pick on a few coppers or maybe violate a traffic law.

"Don't you dare lay hands on me. I'll tell the alderman."

Roger Kiley wired that he was not thinking about football coaching this year until after February 28, election day. "I have troubles enough without thinking about football," wired Kiley, when asked if he would go to Michigan State in the event Chet Wynne, Auburn's head coach, takes that job.

Kiley was immediately wired some expert advice by this column. This was to stuff his shirt front with two or three pillows. No man with a washboard stomach can get elected alderman.

Kiley wears an iron hat well but that seems to be his best qualification. He is thin as a rail and he does not smoke cigars.

However, my scout in Chicago tells me that Kiley, who has been a member of a prominent law firm there for some time, is one of the favorite sons of the Cermak organization, which makes his election a mere formality despite the fact he has not the figure for an alderman. They will put him in the second row when the group picture is made.

Kiley, of course, if elected alderman, will have plenty of time to dash the 180 or so miles over to East Lansing and help Wynne out with the coaching job.

Meanwhile, Auburn still has a slim chance to keep Wynne. But it is so slim as to be almost no hope at all. As reported in The Constitution yesterday, Sam McAlister is slated to replace Wynne if Wynne takes the job. McAlister is a most capable coach.

Auburn, with rare courage, is carrying on despite lack of financial help from the legislature.

STRIB'S HOSS LINIMENT FINALLY WINS.

Since the Fair Grounds track opened at New Orleans I have twice seen where a hoss named Nell Kuhlman has galloped home ahead of the field, paying good prices each time.

And I wish that Nell Kuhlman had galloped home ahead of the field a few times at the Bainbridge track, just out of Cleveland, a year and a half ago.

Nell Kuhlman is owned by Gene Lutz and it was Gene Lutz who helped train W. L. Stribling for his fight with Max Schmeling. When the training periods were over we used to go down to the Bainbridge track and I forget how many times Gene Lutz used to whisper Nell Kuhlman's name to us, but it was quite a few times.

And each time Nell Kuhlman would come in third or with the also-rans. Once, I think, she was second. It is remarkable, now that I think back on it, but we never lost faith in Nell Kuhlman. We used to tear up the tickets most regretfully, but the next time we heard her name whispered by her owner we would line up at the mutuel window.

Gene Lutz was, and no doubt still is, a great believer in hoss liniment for rubbing. And he would often come in there and rub W. L. Stribling's legs with the same medicine he used to rub his hosses' legs with. He was a great believer in it but it never added any speed to Nell Kuhlman's legs nor did it add any speed to W. L. Stribling's legs.

It was a very terrible smelling liniment, as I recall it. But Gene Lutz believed in it as he believed in Nell Kuhlman, and it seems that he is now cashing in. It may be that the liniment has just now penetrated W. L. Stribling's legs, as he is knocking them over on his tour around the canebrakes of the world.

Gene Lutz used to stand under the corner of W. L. Stribling's training ring at Geauga Lake and yelp, "Dance, W. L., dance." At the time this seemed strange advice to give to a fellow who was training for a world's championship fight. But he seemed to place great store in that advice, Gene Lutz did.

But I am glad to read that the liniment has finally soaked in Nell Kuhlman's legs and that she is winning races for Gene Lutz. He was a well-meaning little man despite his hoss liniment and the terrible odor it had.

And as for popping the depression on the nose—look at the Striblings. W. L. Stribling had a half dozen fights in Australia, one in South Africa that drew a gate of $50,000 and now has three ahead, one in London and two in Paris.

Now, that the politicians have made it so that Chet Wynne, the football coach, is likely to leave, there is wailing and gnashing of teeth.

Still, I do not see how the educators, who are always willing to answer a call from another institution, providing there is more money involved, can complain at a football coach or player. I am surprised that no one has developed this argument before.

THE AMATEUR TRIALS.

Mr. Bob Becker, the writer of hunting and fishing for the Chicago Tribune, is in Albany, Georgia, and reports that the quail are more numerous than they were last winter when the southern amateur trials were held at Albany.

This is not difficult to believe despite the fact that last winter the dogs worked 52 bevies, averaging about 30 birds to the bevy. This season the conditions have been better for quail and the work done by the state game and fish department is also producing results.

Becker reports that a number of Albany dog owners are working their field trial dogs, not over the course, to get them in condition for the trials. They require dogs that are able to handle a lot of birds because the trial over the Bingham and

'SARAZEN CUPS' ARE INSTALLED ON COURSE HERE

Atlantans Have Opportunity To Try Them at Forrest Hills Today.

By Roy White.

Eight-inch cups are here!

They have been installed and are ready for play today.

Atlanta golfers will have their first opportunity to test the new eight-inch cups all this week on the Forrest Hills course at Avondale in a week of guest play. Should the players approve the the eight-inch cups, a tournament will be arranged for the following week, it was announced Saturday afternoon by Forrest Hill, manager of the Avondale course .

The new large cups were installed on the popular nine-hole Forrest Hills course Saturday afternoon.

TRY THEM TODAY.

All Atlanta golfers are invited to take advantage of the week's play. Reservations for starting times should be made with Forrest Hill at Dearborn 9240.

Gene Sarazen, British and American open champion, suggested enlarging the present 4 1-4-inch cups to eight inches recently while recovering from an attack of influenza in a Los Angeles (Cal.) hospital.

Since that time the idea has been spread over the country, with varying reactions. Bobby Jones, retired champion of champions, said, "it might make an interesting game." Others are very much in favor of the idea, and many pros and amateurs do not favor the larger cups.

Several of Atlanta's professionals and amateurs have stated that it is worth trying, at least, and so the Forrest Hills club secured the necessary equipment, installed the cups and will await the results with interest.

CAPITAL CITY.

Officials of the Capital City Country Club stated last week that they favor the pla and expect to install the larger cups soon.

George Simons, general manager of city parks, is conducting a canvass of the city's municipal players in an effort to learn whether or not they desire the change. Should the city players favor the idea, at least one of the four municipal courses will be equipped with the new cups.

The Forrest Hills course is one of the toughest nine-hole layouts in the city. It measures more than 2,900 yards and par is 35.

Accuracy from the tees is most essential, as several of the fairways are long and narrow. The greens are large and in the best condition of recent years.

EASY? NOT MUCH.

A duffer, brave and bold, stepped on the green at Forrest Hills in a preliminary test of the big cups Saturday. "A cinch," he said. "I can't miss that big crevasse." But he discovered that the ball rimmed the big cup as easily as the smaller one and placed one under a psychological handicap.

Another said, "Those cups certainly make me confident, but I go on missing short putts just the same," and still another remarked that it is easy to drop one in that barrel staring you in the face, but when he paid off a small wager, he felt rather skeptical, and somewhat embarrassed.

You should try it—now's the chance.

Smiths Divide East Lake Bogey.

Carlton Y. Smith, former southern singles tennis champion, and Muggsy Smith, shared first honor Saturday afternoon in a blind bogey tournament on the East Lake courses with net scores of 70.

Second honor was also divided, but seven players instead of two finished in a tie. They were H. A. Hoffman, Berrien Moore Sr., George Harris Jr., C. W. Allen, K. A. Stephenson, J. O. Porter, P. G. Lombard and R. I. Reed. L. A. Scott was only two strokes away for third place.

The tournament was played on the two courses and the players selected their own handicaps with the blind figure ranging from 70 to 80.

Black Winner At Capital City.

Charlie Black Jr., former Georgia and city amateur champion, won scoring honor Saturday afternoon on the Capital City course with a 74. John Grant Jr. and Hugh Nunnally finished in a tie for second place with 75s.

Other low scorers during the afternoon were Milton Dargan Jr., Hugh Carter Jr. and Johnny Westmoreland.

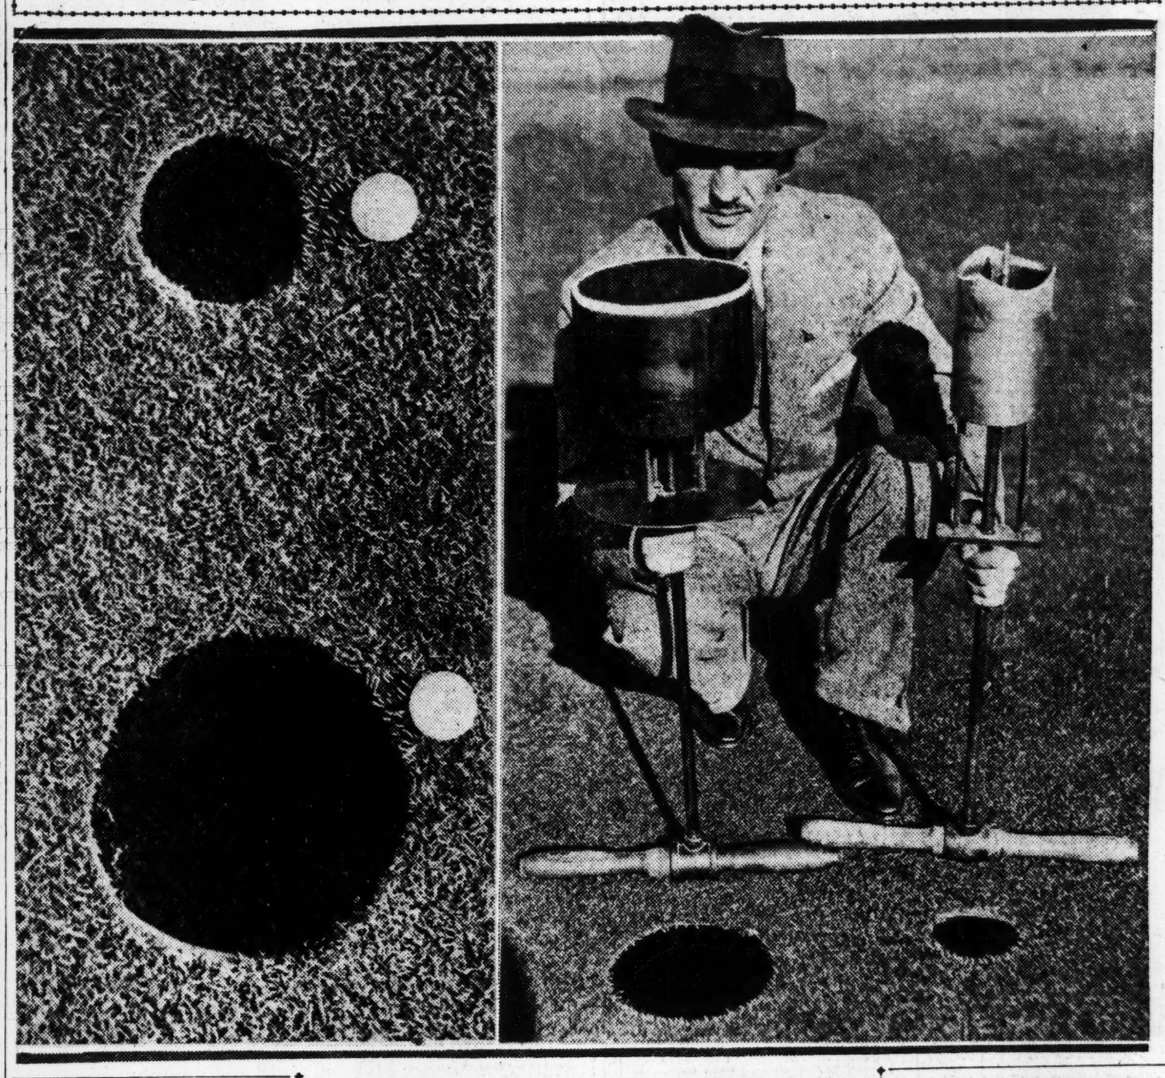

Nunnally has improved his game more than any other Capital City player in recent weeks. He carded a

What Big Eyes You Have, Grandma!--Atlanta Gets Big Golf Cups

SPLIT SEASON FACES DEFEAT

Directors Expected To Adopt Straight 154-Game Schedule.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Jan. 28. (AP)—Directors of the Southern Association of Baseball Clubs will meet here Monday to adopt a 1933 schedule which likely will call for a straight season of 154 games and provide Sunday contests for all cities except Atlanta.

The possibility of a "split season" was practically eliminated today when President John D. Martin expressed the opinion that such a move would require the unanimous consent of association directors, some of whom have expressed their opposition to a "split."

From sources close to Thomas R. Watkins, Memphis club owner, and chairman of the schedule committee, it was learned that the tentative schedule to be submitted makes no provision for Sabbath contests in Atlanta.

UNWISE TO PLAN.

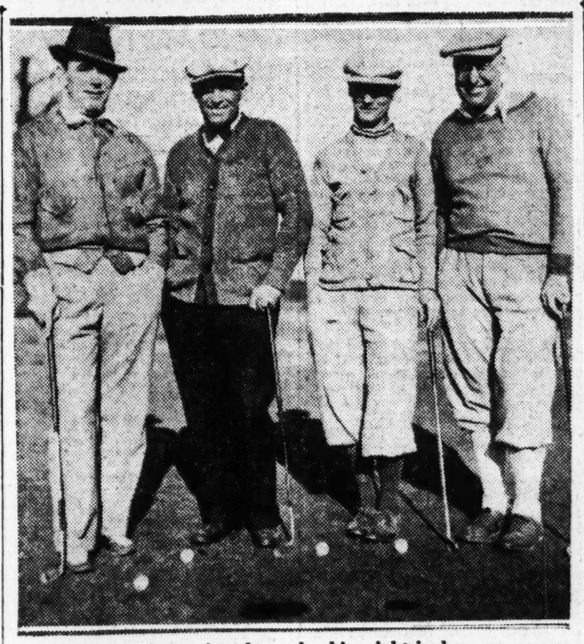

Watkins was represented by associates as taking the position that since the Georgia legislature has not yet lifted the ban on Sunday games for that city it would be unwise to plan them, since tickets and schedules must be printed soon. The schedule must be approved by three-fourths of the directors.

Should Sunday baseball be made possible for Atlanta, games could be transferred there by agreement with opponents in the same manner in which some Sunday contests were provided for Birmingham last season.

Queries by the Associated Press as to the vote necessary to adopt a "split season" program, martin said that unanimous consent would be required.

"Rules can be changed and the constitution amended in the annual meetings in the fall by a vote of three-fourths of the directors," he explained. "At any other time, unanimous agreement is necessary. The Chattanooga meeting is a schedule meeting and not the regular league meeting. Only the schedule can be adopted by three-fourths vote. A straight schedule was

Larger Cups Appear In Atlanta--In Person

By Ralph McGill.

Gene Sarazen's latest model of what the golf cup should look like appeared on the Forrest Hills golf greens Saturday afternoon.

(What big eyes you have, grandma!)

They had a short try-out Saturday afternoon. And you should have heard the comments as some of the Forrest Hills golfers took a few practice putts as the first cups were installed.

Golf has produced many, many remarks but these eight-inch cups are a new incentive.

The general opinion seems to be that they are all right for a while. Most of those who saw and tried them Saturday afternoon didn't like them. A few did.

"Novelty"—"Entirely too large"—"&?*!*XYZ"—"Looks like a good idea"—"They'll be fun all right"—"Is Sarazen Crazy?"—"Well, I can hit these now and then."

And so it went. They will get their real trial this week, with all cups installed for the start of play today at Forrest Hills.

Comments of a few golfers who tried the new cup Saturday afternoon at Forrest Hills, the first club to give Atlantans a try at the big openings, ran about as follows:

W. O. Cheney, principal of Tech High school, and an excellent putter—"It's like putting at a bath tub, the first time you try to sink a putt in that cup."

(He sank two out of four at 15 feet).

"I can't hit the big ones," said Captain M. E. Hicks, crack rifle shot. "It isn't golf, as Bobby Jones said, but I don't mind having some fun with them."

A. C. Miller, well-known manufacturer—"It's like shooting fish when you are close up. But I find that I can miss this one when I'm well away from it."

"I think the cup should be enlarged to about five inches," said Ed McKeithen, "since the ball is a bit

COURT TOURNEY PRICES SLASHED

Southeastern Conference Meet Admission Cut Fifty Per Cent.

A 50 per cent slash in admission prices for the southeastern basketball tournament, starting here on February 24, was announced yesterday by H. J. Stegeman, chairman of the tournament committee.

The committee, meeting at the Athletic Club, decided to reduce prices for all afternoon games to 25 cents upstairs and 50 cents downstairs. Admission to all night games will be 50 cents upstairs and $1 downstairs, with box seats selling for $2. Downstairs seats are reserved.

NO INCREASE.

The committee also decided that the cut rates would prevail throughout the tournament, there being no hike in prices for the finals on Tuesday night. The tournament opens on Friday and lasts four days, with Sunday providing the rest interval.

"We have urged all of the 13 members of the Southeastern conference to enter teams in this, the new conference's first tournament here," Coach Stegeman said.

In the event all teams are entered, there will be three games Friday afternoon and two Friday night, with three byes tossed in to balance the bracket. On Saturday the five winners advance with three byes. The semi-finals come on Monday night and the finals on Tuesday night.

VANDY DOUBTFUL.

There is a possibility that Vanderbilt, which has one of the strongest teams in the tournament, may not send a team due to school requirements regarding absences. But Stegeman has written authorities at Vandy urging them to send the team. L. S. U., another strong team, has announced that it will be represented.

Stegeman believes that the reduction of prices will prove popular with the public and that the tournament will make money, due to the elimination of travel expenses for the faraway teams which comprised the old group. There also will be some color-

VIRLYN MOORE HELD IN CHECK; GOES POINTLESS

McArthur 'Covers' Star Well; Gooding Stars With 10 Points.

While Roy (Shotgun) McArthur, one-handed passing wizard, shadowed Virlyn Moore Jr., so relentlessly that the young Atlanta barrister-to-be was held scoreless, the Georgia Tech basketball team made its shots count last night at the auditorium in defeating the Bulldogs, 26 to 16, squaring the series up to date.

The Bulldogs' offense stayed fairly well clogged for most of the game, due to the Jackets' alertness at hounding the ball. Meanwhile, Hugh Gooding, Tech's compact little forward, was dribbling it through the Georgia defense often enough to ring five field baskets and give his team an early margin to work on.

JACKETS AGGRESSIVE.

McArthur's skill in firing the ball accurately into the hands of the towering Orr, who makes an excellent target on the pivot play, also helped the Gold and White in its maneuvering toward the basket. Johnny Poole, the very brunet chap who plays such a dashing game at Tech's other guard, also proved a good "feeder" and scored five points on his own hook.

The Jackets played aggressivly at all times, Poole, McArthur and Gooding roving the floor tirelessly in rounding up the ball while the lofty Orr and Sophomore Leon Woodall joined merrily in the scrap under the basket.

The Bulldogs, undoubtedly, were off their game, especially Moore. The latter barely got away from some law examinations over in Athens in time to make the trip and apparently he isn't completely over the lame ankle yet. This and the fact that McArthur was "covering" him so closely all worked toward that rarest of happenings when Virlyn Moore is held without a point.

BULLDOGS ERRATIC.

Rex Enright employed him on the hub of the pivot quite a bit, feeding the ball to Stokeley Pound. The latter, incidentally, was the only Bulldog who could find the range with any skill, getting three field baskets. Captain Leroy Young, usually a pretty good shot, was held to one field goal and two free throws which connected. Little Joe Chandler, Atlanta boy, started Georgia off with a pretty field basket, but the Bulldogs soon lagged behind the spurting Jackets.

The score at the half was 12 to 5 in Tech's favor and the Bulldogs never got any closer. The Jackets' victory last night undoubtedly will add interest to the third game of the series, which comes off at Georgia next month. A fine crowd of about 3,000 persons saw last night's game.

"Chuck" Broodwood, well-known pro football player and former member of Bill Redd's Chattanooga Torpedoes, refereed the game. He was forced to pipe his whistle quite often as the play was very hard. Georgia committed 13 personal fouls and Tech 11.

In a preliminary Tech Freshmen defeated Darlington, 21-17.

Atlanta 'Y' Wins Dixie Crown

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Jan. 28. Chattanooga's domination of Dixie independent basketball was rudely snapped here tonight by a pack of wiry, speed demons extraordinary—the Atlanta Y. M. C. A.—who ran up their victory string to 22 as they took the crown unto themselves by making it two in a row over the Dynamos, 49 to 41.

The smaller, more agile, but less pro-like invaders, shooting from every unorthodox position, pounced on the ball like wildcats and broke down the floor with the speed of greyhounds to follow up their 48-to-35 triumph registered in Atlanta this month. J. Phillips, Brock and Raines couldn't miss.

It was the Dynamos' fourth loss to a southern team since 1929, the Chattanooga Moccasins having turned the trick in 1930 and Nashville DuPonts in 1932.

Bryan Grant Beaten By Sutter; Lott Wins

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Wizardry with a tennis racket that carried George M. Lott, of Chicago, to a place on four United States Davis cup teams was his again today as he smashed back the intercollegiate star, Clifford Sutter, of New Orleans, to win the singles championship of the all-south tennis tournament here.

Lott required four sets to win, 6-4, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3, but his withering volleys, easy lobs, and bullet-like placements stamped him again as a formidable candidate for the 1933 Davis cup team. He declined possible selection last year because of business.

Sutter, ranked No. 3 in the national singles list, while Lott is ranked No. 13, had trouble finding the range of the net and the court lines, while Lott made few errors.

Sutter met Lott immediately after running out three consecutive games to defeat Bryan Grant Jr., of Atlanta, in the concluding set of a semi-final match called last night because of darkness with the sets 2-all, and Grant leading 5-4 in the fifth. Sutter was at his best against the Atlanta star, and showed the kind of tennis that caused him to be ranked No. 1 in the tournament here.

Against Lott, however, it was different.

Lott, playing from the back courts, pulled Sutter out of position frequently, and rifled over the placements that gave him the first set, 6-4.

He ran out the second in easy style, 6-2, smashing the ball at the net with a vicious swing, as Sutter's returns from the back courts were low.

Sutter found his range, however, in the third set, and won it 6-3 as

Lanier Replaces G.M.A. On Tech High Schedule

Lanier High, of Macon, Ga., has replaced Riverside Military Academy, of Gainesville, on the Tech High football schedule for October 21 at Ponce de Leon park, it was announced Saturday afternoon by W. O. Cheney, principal of Tech High school.

In the original Smithie schedule, Riverside was given a place on the card but conflicting dates made it impossible for Riverside to accept and Lanier High was immediately scheduled.

It will be the first football meeting between Tech High and Lanier High in many years and will be the only opportunity for the Macon Poets to play in the city.

Boys' High plays Lanier in Macon on November 11 and G. M. A. will close its season with the Poets in Macon on November 30 in a Thanksgiving game.

Lanier High always has one of the best prep football teams in the state and has played for the southern division title of the G. I. A. A. for several successive seasons.

Last year Boys' High defeated Lanier High, 6 to 2, at Ponce de Leon park and then won the state championship with a 20-to-12 victory over the Poets in a post-season game in Macon.

Another tentative date on the Smithie card with Charlotte on October 28 in Charlotte has been confirmed, it was announced and the remainder of the schedule will remain as announced.

Few Changes Planned as Tech Prepares for Spring Grid Drills

EXAMINATIONS WILL DETERMINE SIZE OF SQUAD

Tommy Peeler, 1931 Star, May Be Eligible for Team.

By Jimmy Jones.

Spring football practice at Georgia Tech, which starts on February 20, will not witness any extensive shifting of players. This is the present viewpoint of Coach William A. (Bill) Alexander, who has been studying a mental chart of his material for some time.

"I figure that we'll have several weeks of good hard drilling on fundamentals and that's about all," the veteran coach of the Jackets stated Saturday. He is very well satisfied with the style of offense his team played last season and all that is needed is more and better men to deploy it. The spring squad is expected to comprise around 50 men.

Of course there may be a few minor changes made here and there, for example in the backfield, where there is a veritable host of candidates coming up, including several promising sophomores. Jack Cannon, who is on hand to instruct the linemen, also will have a look at some husky lads to be sent up by the freshman squad of last fall.

STRONG SOPHOMORE.

Outstanding among the yearling backs who will consort for the first time with the varsity are "Pug" Boyd and Billy Street, former Tech High stars; Martin, a powerful runner from South Carolina; John Wilcox, a fullback from Texas; Dave McKinstry, from Boys' High, who is a good punter; McKinley and several others. These young men will be put in the hands of Bobby Dodd, the very capable varsity backfield coach.

The freshman line of 1932, which was thoroughly grounded in rudimentary football by Mack Tharpe and Kenneth Thrash, will furnish some new blood for the battle-scarred front wall of last year's varsity.

Hoot Gibson, clever end from Tech High; Barbre, another end from Lanier High; Eubanks, tackle from Lanier; Leland Wilcox, guard from Tyler, Texas; Britten, a tackle from Ensley High, Alabama; Lyons, big center from Canton, Ga.; Abee, another center candidate; Chance, tackle, and Gilpin, guard, are among the sophomores-to-be in the line material. Morris Katz, from Boys' High, is another fine end possibility, provided an old knee injury does not handicap him.

Coach Alex believes that among this list of hopefuls there are some men who will be of considerable aid to the varsity next year.

"A whole lot depends on how they come through their spring examinations," he pointed out. There is a lot to be considered there, since each year Tech has had at least one or two valuable athletes who fall victims to the stringent scholastic requirements.

CAREER IN BALANCE.

The future career of Tommy Peeler, brilliant back of the 1931 Tech varsity, also hangs in the balance on the outcome of these examinations. Peeler, who was ineligible last year, will be eligible for the 1933 varsity provided he makes a passing grade in the spring tests. Coach Alex pointed out. Peeler, a very hard-running back, is a valuable man and would come in very handy next fall. He was a regular in the Tech '31 backfield until ruled ineligible for the year by the faculty.

The year's layoff will not hurt Peeler, as he practiced regularly with the Gray Devils last fall.

Getting back to the spring practice and the matter of personnel, Coach Alexander has very little to say right now as to what men will be placed in the foremost category. Of course he has a number of regulars returning from last year's varsity who will be front-rank contenders by priority.

Tech, however, loses some good men in both line and backfield. The indomitable Monk Neblett will be gone from the center ranks, and Jerry Goldsmith and Sid Williams, two very capable ends, Tom Cain, tackle; Eddie Laws and Casey Jones, guards, also will pass on. George Viereck, another end, has one more year of varsity football but likely will be graduated. The backfield will be shorn of Roy McArthur, Jap Hart, Ben Cherry, Pat Barron and Hugh Gooding, all active in most of last year's games.

TACKLES RETURN.

But returning are the two tackles who saw a majority of service—Bob (Blondy) Tharpe and Clyde (Peewee) Williams, two varsity ends; Jimmy Slocum and Tom Spradling; Dave Wilcox, Mutt Morris and Tarzan Lacker, guards; Johnny Poole, center. "King" Brady and Gonk Gardner are two more tackles who have another year to play.

The backfield brings back Jack Phillips, Norris Dean, Chick Galloway, Wilbur Peterson, Wink Davis, John Ferguson and Shorty Roberts, not to mention Peeler, if he becomes eligible.

Coach Alex stated that he had determined to keep both Dean and Phillips, who were tried in the line previously, in the backfield next fall. Phillips played good football in the games in which he played toward the latter part of the schedule, while Dean's magnificent punting, protecting Galloway's 75-yard touchdown run, won the Alabama game.

"We can use Dean's kicking next fall and he should be a better back with more experience," Coach Alex said. He considers Phillips a capable defensive back and trusts he will have his services all season.

While he maintains his happy medium of being neither a pessimist nor an optimist, one gathers from a talk with the Tech coach that things are looking up for the hard schedule his team must play in 1933. That is, provided the exams don't lop anybody off.

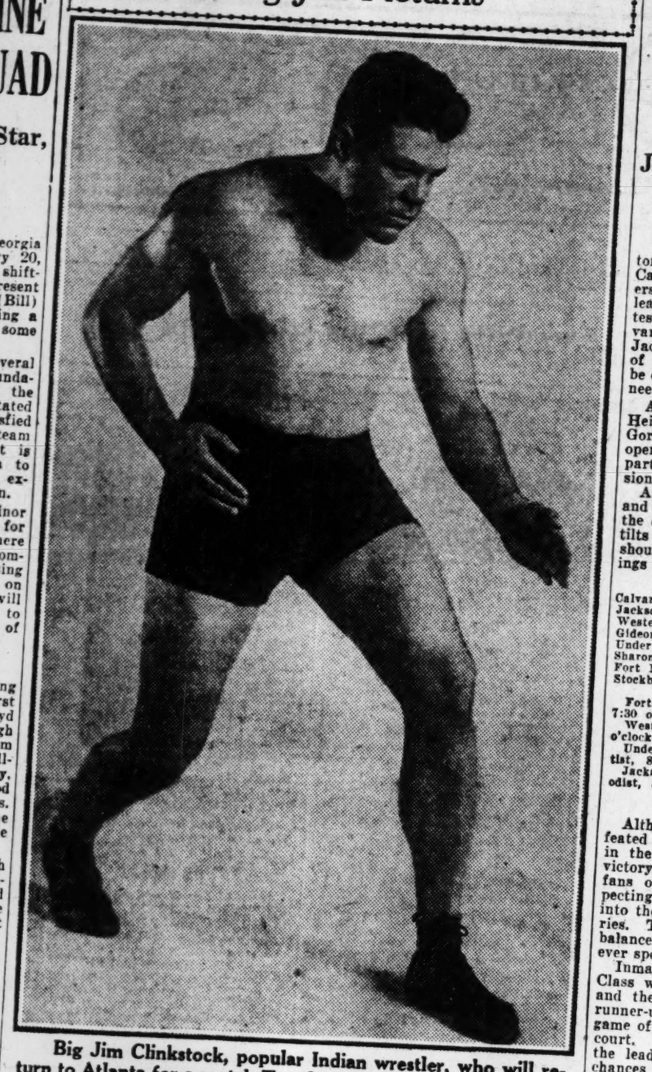

Auburn Starts Practice Monday.

AUBURN, Ala., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Spring football practice starts at Alabama Polytechnic Institute here tomorrow.

Some 60-odd candidates are expected to report for a six weeks' drill. Auburn had one of the best teams in the south last year, but the loss of Jimmy Hitchcock, All-American halfback, and other stars will force Coach Chet Wynne to rebuild the machine for 1933.

Wynne's main problem will be the forward wall, for the backfield, even with the loss of Hitchcock, will rank among the best and fastest in Dixie.

Big Jim Returns

Big Jim Clinkstock, popular Indian wrestler, who will return to Atlanta for a match Tuesday night with Whitey Hewitt at the city auditorium.

MAT BARGAIN FOR TUESDAY

Wrestling bargain shoppers would do well to drop in on Henry Weber's next card at the auditorium Tuesday night when an attractive program featuring Jim Clinkstock against Whitey Hewitt in the main event and Jack Zarnos versus Ralph De Leon in the semi-windup, will be offered at the same low rates which have obtained for some weeks past.

Atlanta fans will welcome the return of Big Jim Clinkstock, 235-pound Cherokee Indian, who has shown here often and become a prime favorite through his clean and skillful style of grappling. Jim has built up an impressive string of victories here, interrupted only by a defeat from Jim Londos, the champion, and a draw with Jim McMillen, ranked as one of the three best wrestlers in America.

In most of his matches Clinkstock has triumphed through the use of his flying scissors. Despite his bulk he is very fast at obtaining this hold, and once it is secured he is able to exert such enormous pressure with his sinewy legs that his opponents sag into a state of helplessness upon the canvas.

Hewitt, a huskily-built Canadian of 225 pounds, showed conclusively in his match here against Pat O'Shocker, the steaming Irishman, last week that he is well able to take care of himself and should prove a hardy opponent even for a man of Clinkstock's caliber. Whitey goes to meet trouble more than halfway, and is certain to be the aggressor in his match with the big Indian. Should he connect with one of his flying tackles before Jim can get an opening for his scissors, the aborigine is apt to find himself on the short side of the two-hour argument.

Jack Zarnos, Atlanta's latest mat villian, will strive to improve his local percentage in the one-hour semi-final at the expense of Ralph De Leon, French heavyweight champion. Zarnos succumbed to Jim McMillen after a terrific struggle last week, but in De Leon he will be meeting a man more nearly on a par with himself in size and experience. The battle between these two should rival the main go in thrills.

Tickets, at 90-cent top price plus taxes, are going in gratifying fashion at the Piedmont Hatters and the Miner & Carter Drug Company.

GRANT BEATEN BY CLIFF SUTTER

Lott sent several balls outside the lines.

Showing no signs of tiring as the battle pulled toward the two-hour mark in time, Lott stood up under Sutter's best efforts in the fourth set, won the first four games, dropped the next three, and then ran out the eighth and ninth for victory. He snatched the eighth after it went to deuce seven times, scoring a placement for one point and winning as Sutter drove the ball out.

Lott brought the crowd to its feet for a final burst of applause as he pulled Sutter out of position and drove over a sizzling placement for the winning point in the ninth game, giving him the fourth set, 6-3, and the match at three sets to one.

Jay Cohn, of Chicago, Berkeley Bell, of New York, Dr. Gene McCauliff, of New York, and Gustavo Vollmer, of Cuba, were other stars who entered the tournament.

Bell and Mangin advanced to the final round of the doubles championship, defeating Carroll Turner and Gus Feuer, of Miami, today, 6-1, 6-4.

The other semi-finals match was called because of darkness, with Lott and Jimmy Van Allen, of Palm Beach, leading Sutter and McCauliff two sets to one. Sutter and McCauliff won the first set, 6-4, but Lott and Van Allen came back to take the next two, 6-4, 6-1, before darkness set in.

The match will be finished at 11 o'clock tomorrow and the winner will play Bell and Mangin for the title at 3 o'clock.

M'KAY, LAWSON IN SWEEPSTAKES

The John Blick Sweepstakes, to be staged on February 10-11, will have as participants the ranking bowlers of the city. Already George W. McKay and Walter Lawson have won entries via the preliminary sweepstakes staged on Monday and Tuesday of last week.

Two more entries will be awarded on Monday and Tuesday of this week and the final two awards will be made in the first two days of the week following and then the entry list will be reviewed by the unfortunate ones who have to "dig" for their $10 deep into their jeans in order to compete for the cash awards and the gold medal to be given to the winner, as well as an opportunity to the two top men to compete in a doubles match against Nick Tronsky and Ray Barnes, world's champion bowlers.

In the preliminary sweepstakes the entry fee is $1 and three games are bowled, the total pins to count and decide the winner who receives a paid up entry to the Blick event.

John Blick toppled the duckpins for three games of 143-166-149, or a set of 458, in a practice workout with Bowen and Bell on Friday afternoon. This is the highest three-game total to be collected at the local alleys.

The Ladies' Commercial ended their first series on Friday night and will open the second with the addition of a new team on Friday of this week. The Atlanta Paper Company won the first series championship in this handicap loop, and with Bebe Bangert hitting a real stride the Paper team will set a fast pace in the new round of play. However, Lucky Strikes, Model Laundry, Chevrolet, and Georgia Power Company are considerably improved and will make a strong bid for the championship.

The Southern Handicap tenpin tourney, slated for March 6-11, looms as the biggest tenpin event that has ever been attempted in this section of the country. Saturday, John Bell, secretary of the Atlanta Bowling Association, received word that Birmingham will have three teams instead of one, as announced previously, and that several other towns in Alabama are contemplating placing entries in the tourney in addition to those already registered. Also, word has been received that Memphis, a great bowling center, has the tourney under consideration, and that it is probable that several teams will be entered from that city. All in all, the prize fund is increasing as additional entries come in, and already the entries have carried the prize fund in excess of the minimum amount of $300 guaranteed by John S. Blick. Not only are many teams to be represented from out of town, but there will be about 20 league teams from Atlanta in the tourney, and about 50 "booster" teams will be entered before the entry list is closed.

Anderson To Bank On Young Players

The Atlanta colored baseball team, composed of some of the best young players in the south, are laying plans for one of the best seasons in history under the leadership of J. W. Anderson.

Manager Anderson is well known in the south and has had a great deal of success developing young players.

Paul Andrews Gets Raise and Signs Up

DORA, Ala., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Paul Andrews, Boston American pitcher, is not a member of the holdout league—a $2,500 increase contributed to his willingness to sign.

Andrews announced here that his 1933 contract which included the raise had been returned with his signature affixed.

The increase, he said, was a reward for his work last season. He won 11 and lost 7 games with the Red Sox in the cellar in 1932.

CALVARY FACES SEASON'S TEST TUESDAY NIGHT

Jackson Hill Is Hurdle for Methodist in Sewanee League.

Scoring their eighth consecutive victory in the series of the past week, Calvary Methodist gained part ownership of top position in the Sewanee league. But they will meet the acid test in Tuesday night's series on Calvary court as they are slated to meet Jackson Hill Baptist, the runner-up of the first half. This game should be one of the best played in the Sewanee league this season.

Another good tilt brings Western Heights Baptist and the Gideons of Gordon Street Baptist together in the opener. Both clubs finished the first part of the race in the upper division.

As usual four games will be played and fans are advised to come early as the clubs participating in the feature tilts have large following and seats should be at a premium. The standings and complete schedule follow:

ATLANTA LEAGUE.

Although Peachtree Christian defeated Associate Reform Presbyterian in the series of the past week, the victory was not an easy one and the fans of the Atlanta league are expecting the cellar occupants to break into the victory column with each series. The Atlanta league is the best balanced this season of any league ever sponsored by the Y-Church A. A.

Inman Park Baptist and Alpha Class were victors in the last series and these two clubs will battle for runner-up position in the feature game of Thursday's series on Calvary court. Both are one game behind the leaders and each has two more chances to go into a tie. This game will open the play for the night at 7 o'clock.

The leaders also draw a tough assignment for the night as they meet at the fast Triple E. Class.

After a week's rest, the leaders of the girls' division, Alpha Class of Wesley Memorial, will resume play and are slated to meet the girls from Associate Reform Presbyterian, Georgia Baptist Nurses and Gordon Street Baptist will meet in the other game of this division. BIG SIX.

LaGrange Y. M. C. A. appears in Atlanta again Wednesday night to play the Triangles. The Triangles defeated LaGrange in the first round of play at LaGrange, but the visitors have improved since that time and should furnish stiff opposition. The Triangles have won every game on the schedule to date. Gulf Refining Company plays Wilder All-Stars in the opener at 7 o'clock and Parks-Chambers will keep in condition by playing the Federal Employes at 8 o'clock. This is the second set of games in the second half of the split season.

CIVIC LEAGUE.

The Civic league started the second half of their split season with some good games being played. DeMolay won the first half without a loss. Linen Service pulled the greatest surprise, holding New York Life to 8 to 5 at the half, but the Lifers ran away with them in the second stanza, winning, 24 to 13. Coca-Cola lost a hard game to Fulton National after leading them more than half of the game.

Daytona Beach Prepares for Campbell's Attempt of 300 M. P. H.

BRITISH SPEED KING TO DRIVE NEW BLUEBIRD

Schneider Airplane Motor of Machine Capable of 2,500 Horsepower.

By Jack Troy.

Daytona Beach, Fla., scene of the greatest drama of land super-speed since 1903, when Stanley Winton adjusted his goggles behind the steering wheel of a non-streamlined machine and whizzed up and down the smooth beach course at a perfectly breath-taking speed of 68 miles per hour—the first record—is now preparing for its greatest show—Sir Malcolm Campbell's attempt in February to raise his own record from 253 miles per hour to 300 in the revamped Bluebird II.

Shades of Stanley Winton! Twenty-nine years have passed. Twenty-nine years that have brought an increase of 185 miles per hour in the speed traveled on the ground in great steamlined automotive creations powered with the finest motors available.

By right of nature, Daytona Beach has a copyright on the chapters written in the process of ever increasing speed on land. There the azure blue skies, the wide sweep of hard-packed beach and the soft sea breezes combine to make a perfect setting for the monarchs of speed. On one side the course is lapped by turquoise waves and on the other the shore line dunes extend in a wavering line along the entire length.

THE ONE AND ONLY.

Nowhere else in all the world is there to be found a course of equal facility.

From the beaches of England and New Zealand to the baked clay courses of South Africa the straight-away kings in the realm of super-speed have gone in their quest of a stretch of ground that would serve them in their death-defying ventures. But none can compare with the glassy smoothness, the clear, clean air for visibility or the length on which a roaring racing machine can be driven with a comparative degree of safety that nature parceled out to Daytona Beach.

And so for the fourth time the quiet-spoken, steel-nerved British titleholder, Sir Malcolm Campbell, is sailing overseas for the purpose of raising the record to new heights. Dates for the impending trials have been set between February 10-20.

After the late Sir Henry Segrave, a fellow Britisher, crossed the border line of 200 miles per hour in 1927 and departed for England with a record of 203 miles per hour, Campbell followed in 1928 with Bluebird I to elevate the mark three miles per hour.

An American, Ray Keech, who was later killed in a smashup at Altoona, entered the super-speed picture five days later. He drove the seven-ton Triplex, a big lumbersome machine, a mile an hour faster than Campbell's record to leave the mark resting at 207 for Segrave to shoot at the following year.

Then it was that the Golden Arrow, a marvelous achievement of British automotive engineering, was born to the world of speed. Segrave left the racing world startled after the 1929 trials, having driven the roaring machine to an unlooked for speed of 231 miles per hour. Wise observers predicted that this mark would stand for many years to come.

SEGRAVE KILLED.

But they had reckoned not on the relentless ambition and ceaseless energy of Segrave's greatest rival and fellow countryman, Campbell. Bluebird I became Bluebird II, with a finer streamlined body and a more powerful motor.

Segrave retired and left the field to Campbell, no other competitors having appeared. Speed boat racing appealed to Segrave and, in a smashup on Lake Windermere, in England, he was killed.

But that was after Campbell had transported Bluebird II overseas in 1931 and recaptured the record with a really breath-taking performance at 245 miles per hour.

More improvements were made to the Bluebird and the result was last year's astounding new record of 253 miles per hour. But before he left Daytona Beach for the return trip to England, Sir Malcolm Campbell announced that he was not satisfied. He said he would return with a greater Bluebird and establish a greater record.

Only Campbell remains of the drivers who have known the thrill of a speed above 200 miles per hour. Only two others besides himself experienced it. Other drivers who neared what was but a short time ago the cherished goal in speed racing are dead, too. Frank Lockhart was killed in front of the grandstand when a tire blew out on the tiny Stutz Blackhawk.

BIBLE CRASHES.

And Lee Bible, a novice, crashed to his death in the Triplex, carrying with him a cameraman, Charles Traub, who was out on the course taking pictures. The cause of Bible's mishap never was definitely established. It was thought that either the new motor installed before the trials had "frozen" or that Bible lifted his foot too quickly from the accelerator.

Kaye Don, a third Britisher, never threatened to break 200 miles per hour in the Silver Bullet.

Bluebird II, which now is equipped with a new Schneider airplane motor capable of developing 2,500 horsepower, as compared with the 1,400 horsepower motor of last year, is also changed in other respects. Principally there is an air intake to the carburetor, which sticks out like a gun, giving the front of the car the appearance of an armored tank. The tail of the machine has been raised, and the ground clearance lowered. Its chassis has been lengthened 18 inches.

This year's trials, more than ever will be a matter of patient and cautious waiting. Back in 1905 the best speed efforts produced only a little above a mile a minute. The goal in 1933 is five miles a minute!

Schelver's Dogs Enter Tampa Show

TAMPA, Fla., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Two hundred dogs were shown here today at the eighth annual dog show of the South Florida Kennel Club held for the benefit of the Tampa Junior League.

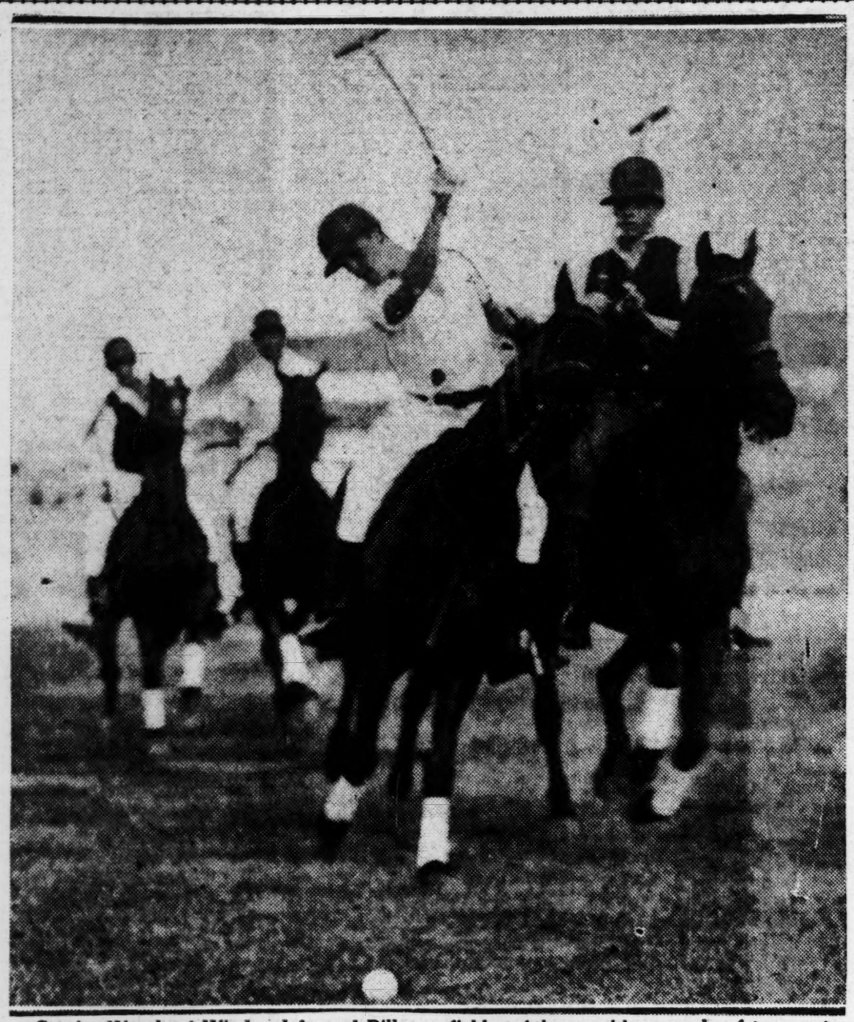

Judge Alex H. Stewart, of Chicago, began the judging today, which will continue tomorrow, the final day of the show.

Entries were received from all parts of the state and from many winter visitors. They ranged from great Danes to tiny griffens.

Among awards announced today was first prize for the best male Irish setter, Daniel Boone, owned by E. E. Horn, of Miami.

Among the visiting exhibitors are L. F. Schelver, Chamblee, Ga.; Miss Betty Wright, Miami, and Mrs. W. C. Edminston, Ralston, Neb.

STREET SOUNDS GRIM WARNING

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Manager Gabby Street, of the St. Louis Cardinals, today announced a radical change in his infield plans for 1933 and gave grim warning that he will crack the whip on the Redbirds during the spring training season.

The old sergeant has decided it would be unwise to try to turn Frankie Frisch into a shortston, as he said recently he would do.

"It's only a fool that never changes his mind," Street said. "When I said early in January that I thought I'd drill Frisch at short it looked like the only way out of a predicament, if Gelbert couldn't play. But now I realize that would be putting all my eggs in one basket."

He said he expects a year of good baseball from Rogers Hornsby, erstwhile manager of the Chicago Cubs, but if he fails to make the grade, Frisch would go back to second and the problem of finding a shortstop would arise. So Frisch goes back to third, he said, and Sparky Adams and Charley Gelbert will fight it out for shortstop.

Street squared his jaw when he talked about the spring training season.

"I take all the blame for our failure to come out of Florida in condition last spring," he said. "I was stuck on my ball club. I thought we could step out and win the pennant easily. I didn't bear down in the training. But this year there'll be a different story. I'll be manager again. I'll crack the whip and it's going to be a different training trip, not a pleasure jaunt.

"Last year when pitchers tired of chasing flies, I let them quit, though I felt they hadn't had enough work. Well, this spring I'll decide when they have had enough work and there will be no early morning fishing trips. No, there won't be any orders against fishing or surf bathing or golf. But recreation will be of secondary importance and the boys will have to forego golf, fishing and the beach until after the day's work is done."

Real Hot Race This Season Seen

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Watch the Pirates!

The bold Buccaneers—Pittsburgh's entry to the National league—are going to launch a raiding expedition when the 1933 baseball season opens in an effort to win a pot of gold.

George Gibson

This warning was served today on the rest of the pack by George Gibson, mild-mannered manager of the Pirates, who says, however, "I don't win the pennant in the winter time."

"Gibby," spending the winter on his farm near here, said in an interview that the acquisition by the Bucs of Freddy Lindstrom, outfielder, from the New York Giants, will have a tonic effect on the rest of the squad.

"We have an improved team over last year but we must take into consideration that the other teams also have been strengthened from the deals they made," Gibson said. "From the lineup on the teams at this time I would say that the National league is in for another close race this year.

"In securing Lindstrom the Pirates landed a player that is on a par with the Waner brothers—a real star that will give the team the balance it lacked last year in the outfield and a consistent hitter from the right side of the plate. I look for Lindstrom to have one of his best years this year and be a big help to the Pirates in the pennant scramble during 1933.

"With the experience that Shortstop Vaughan, Second Baseman Piet and Catcher Grace got last year, I feel confident that such men as Third Baseman Traynor, First Baseman Suhr, the Waners and Pitchers Meine, Swetonic, Swift, Kremer, French and the younger men that the Pirates will have this year, will cause plenty of trouble before the race is over in September."

Boys' High Downs Columbus, 41 to 33

A spectacular rally in the last half enabled the Boys' High basketball team to defeat Columbus High, 41 to 33, Saturday night on the Henry Grady court. Boys' High was trailing, 20 to 15, at the half, but came back strong in the third period to tie the score and win out in the last quarter.

Boys' High played one of its best games of the season to win, and its passing, together with the many shots from close range, were outstanding features.

Ezzell at forward, with 14 points, and Maffett at center, with 12 points, led the attack.

Kirkland and Parks played the best game for Columbus.

Old Lady Luck Still With Stribling Family

Old Lady Luck, it seems, is still with the Stribling family when it comes to the all-important function of bestowing her blessings upon the box offices.

Word comes from Pa Stribling, head of the famous Georgia family, now on its third tour of Europe, that the bout between his son and Don McCorkindale, the South African pugilist, drew a cool $32,000 in gold at Johannesburg. There are lots and lots of folks who didn't know there was that much gold anywhere, and if there was, it could not be drawn for a fight in South Africa.

Pa Stribling is ready to attest to the fact that there was that much money in the "house" and, furthermore, that it rained all during the preliminaries and flooded the ring for the main bout. The promoter had to bring in several cartloads of sawdust at the last minute to get the ring above water level. Approximately 15,000 persons saw the scrap.

This goes to prove that Stribling is either a first-rate attraction in Europe or that the South African fans thought an awful lot of McCorkindale.

The scrap undoubtedly was a "big shot" in European ring circles, for one of the London papers gave it two columns.

It also develops that Stribling did right well in other sections of Europe. He was the only one of the American fighters who went to Australia with a view of recouping their purses who had any luck. He left Sydney with a few thousand added to his bank roll, whereas Jack Renault and several other American heavies who went over there were left stranded when the promoter at Sydney went into bankruptcy, his stadium going with him. They didn't even get fare back home and had to beat it to South Africa behind Stribling to pick up the necessities of life over there.

Evidently the striblings are well pleased with their earnings overseas, for they do not plan to return to the states until April. They have accepted three fights with Jeff Dickson, the southerner who promotes over there, and W. L. will fight twice in Paris and once in London between now and spring.

N. G. I. C. CAGE MEET TO OPEN HERE THURSDAY

Five Games Scheduled for Opening Day at Atlanta Athletic Club.

By Roy White.

Decatur High will defend its North Georgia Interscholastic conference basketball championship on the Atlanta Athletic Club court this week when the third annual conference tournament will be played. Five games are scheduled for Thursday night, with four games Friday night and three Saturday.

Gainesville and Marietta, two North Georgia rivals, will open the card at 6 o'clock Thursday, followed by R. E. Lee, of Thomaston, and North Fulton at 7 o'clock.

Newnan High, an old member; Fulton, Druid Hills and North Fulton High have been admitted to the conference since the last tournament and will offer plenty of competition. North Fulton and Newnan were voted members at the meeting last week.

13 MEMBERS.

There are 13 members of the conference and all are entered in the tournament.

Griffin, Fulton and Newnan drew byes in the first round and will not get into competition until Friday night.

"Heavy" Hammond, "Lefty" Murdock, R. L. Doyal and Howard Sentell, all members of the newly organized basketball officials' association, have been selected as referees and alternates.

E. P. McIlwain, of Fulton, is general chairman of the tournament committee and will be assisted by Jodie Matt, of Thomaston; R. L. Bowen, of Russell, and T. G. Dulin, president, of Griffin.

The tournament appears to be a "wide open" affair, with every team having an equal chance. Decatur High, the defending champion, was beaten by University school and each of the other teams, including University, have suffered reverses during the regular season.

GOOD GAMES.

Outstanding games on the first night's card are Gainesville and Marietta at 6 o'clock; Commercial and Russell, two old rivals, at 9 o'clock, and Marist and University school, another pair of bitter rivals, at 10 o'clock.

The schedule:

6:00—Marietta vs. Gainesville.
7:00—R. E. Lee vs. North Fulton.
8:00—Druid Hills vs. Decatur.
9:00—Commercial vs. Russell.

TRIANGLES WIN AT CHATTANOOGA

ity of Jude Baesman to get the tip-off against Raines contributed largely to the locals' downfall, although Baesman played the greatest game of his career here under the backboard.

The injury suffered this week in Atlanta by Babe Mitchell, a most vital cog in the Dynamo machine, proved costly. The smooth cager, hurt against the J. P. C.'s, remained on the bench in the first half and when he went in as the second started with the "Y" leading, 31 to 17, he enabled the team to get back in the ball game. It is pure conjecture, however, to say that the presence of him would have turned the tide.

Spring Grid Work Hurts College Ball, Coach Alex Says

Popularity of Football Draws Many Good Prospects Away From Diamond.

By Jimmy Jones.

In case you want to know, there is a gentleman who can tell you exactly what is wrong with college baseball in the south. And you can depend on him to be perfectly frank about this, as he is about everything else.

He is Coach William Anderson Alexander, the head coach at Georgia Tech, and no man in the south knows more about college athletics of all kinds. The trouble, he says, with college baseball is spring football.

Coach Alex was found sitting alone before his desk in his office out at Grant field "breaking in" one of an assortment of new pipes a friend had given him and reflecting upon the present trend of sports. A traveling man for some training room supplies dropped in and commented on the gusty wind which was whistling about the eaves outside.

He asked if there would be anything today.

"The depression is on, my dear fellow," Coach Alex informed the man kindly, and he left without selling an order for anything.

The conversation quite naturally drifted to spring sports then and why there was no need for buying supplies for any of them right now, saving spring football which is almost a month away.

"Spring football, now that's an idea for you if you want to know what's wrong with college baseball," Coach Alex allowed as he wheeled around in his swivel chair and laid the crooked-stem pipe on the desk.

COMPLAINTS.

We had been complaining bitterly at the slender patronage which is being given college basketball and baseball. As usual, Mr. Alexander had a good horse sense remedy for the subjects upon which he had been theorizing.

"Several years ago there was no such thing as spring football among southern colleges and all of them had crackerjack baseball teams. Why? Because the football coaches didn't have to take the baseball players away from their coach and put them in football uniforms," he pointed out.

Coach Alexander readily asserted that he was guilty of this himself.

"But what else are we going to do? The average southern team isn't so blessed with all kinds of material as to be able to spare these boys who play both football and baseball. One of the sports has to suffer and since football is the sport that carries predominance with the public, we must get the football players in shape," he added.

ALEX SYMPATHETIC.

The Tech coach, who can see the position of the baseball coach as readily as his own, said he would be delighted, personally, to let all the boys go out for baseball if the conference would adopt a regulation on this.

"But, it isn't fair for one school to divide its material equally among the football and baseball squads and the other not do the same." What he meant by this was the fact that whereas football players of one school might be allowed to miss the helpful effects of spring practice in order to play baseball, a rival team in the conference would be utilizing all its men on the spring gridiron squad, getting them ready for the next season.

"Then they'd come along in the fall and knock our ears off and the football fans would be wanting to know how come," Alex said with a slow, meaning smile.

The Tech coach also believes that college baseball demands long-distance hitters and good pitching, just as the professional game does, if it is to catch the eye of the public. He mentioned the years when Tech had such players as Wykoff, Angley, Merkle, Reeves, and still earlier than that, Settle, Dennicke, Morgan, Palmisano, et al. Baseball paid its way in those days.

"I recall two games with Georgia in 1926 here, both won by Gus Merkle and Doug Wykoff on home runs; there were 9,000 out for those games."

While he is not minimizing the ability of present-day college players, that was just another way Coach Alex had of telling how spring football had cut into the game. Most of the big guys who can hit a baseball over the fence are out for tackle or fullback on the spring football squad.

L. S. U. To Sound Call February 6.

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 28.—(UP)—A call for gridiron candidates aspiring to berths in the 1933 Bengal lair of Louisiana State University to report for spring practice on Monday, February 6, was issued today by Captain Lawrence M. (Biff) Jones, director of the Tigers' football destinies.

NO REDUCTIONS.

Prospects for a reduction in admission prices faded early in the week when President Martin was quoted by Memphis newspapers as saying the association could not hope to continue operation with reduced gate fares. The matter probably won't be brought to the attention of the meeting.

The tentative schedule, it is understood, provides double-headers for most Sundays and makes a fairly even division of Sunday and holiday "home games."

Service Club Bouts Slated for Monday

Bull Johnson, slugging soldier, and Reenie McDuffie will feature the first boxing card sponsored by the Service Club at 7:30 o'clock Monday night at the Fort McPherson arena.

Johnson defeated McDuffie once and the two fought to a draw in their last meeting.

A double semi-windup has been planned to feature Battling Maddox and "Chink" Tarpley, from the Fort, and Harry Peck and Frank Wheeler.

There will be 40 rounds of boxing on the card and "Tubby" Walton has been secured as the referee. The 22d infantry band will furnish music during the intermission.

Potter plantations and game preserves produce bevies—not coveys.

The Albany trials will see some great dogs next month. Atlanta will send some excellent entries. The best of the lot, so far as I have been able to determine, will be entered by Dr. George Myshrall. He has a pointer all-age, Sis Callie, which was trained on the prairies in Canada, and reports have it that the little pointer can go wide and handsome. Other entries from the Myshrall kennel will also be strong contenders.

larger. But eight inches is too big. It looks as large as a well."

L. D. McMath, taking a practice putt or so, said, "It's too big, but then golfers seem to want to try it and we may as well get the novelty of it done with and then forget it."

J. C. McCowan, E. N. Taylor and J. H. Layman, other players who happened by as the first eight-inch cups were being set, hoped they would be able to hit it a bit better than the old one.

Forrest Hill, head of the Forrest Hills club, thinks the eight-inch cups will provide a lot of fun for a while. For that reason he is opening the course, the first one in Atlanta to provide golfers with a chance to try the new rage which Gene Sarazen, open champion, started a few weeks ago.

He watched a putt rim the cup and spin out, just as so many of them do on the regulation size.

"They can be missed very easily from any distance," said Hill, "and they seem to act like the regular cup when it comes to rimming and hanging on the lip. I think they will be interesting for a while."

Hill is inviting golfers of the city, who care to, to have a try over the Forrest Hills course. Reservations must be made this week. A tournament over the course and the eight-inch cups will be played if the interest shown is sufficient."

Atlanta is the second city in the south to try the big cups. Miami has a couple of courses equipped with them and a tournament or so is planned.

Gene Sarazen started the whole thing a few weeks ago by declaring that he believed all golf cups should be increased in size to eight inches in diameter. It would, he said, give added interest to the game and make it more exciting.

The first big play in Atlanta is scheduled for this week at Forrest Hills.

AUBURN ALUMNI SEEK TO RETAIN WYNNE TODAY

Meeting To Be Held in Auburn and Montgomery.

By Ralph McGill.

Auburn alumni will meet today in Auburn and Montgomery, seeking to develop plans which will keep Chet Wynne, head coach, at Auburn for another period of years.

Wynne's three-year contract has expired and he is practically sure of accepting a position as head coach at Michigan State, a position recently vacated by Jim Crowley.

The Auburn alumni will discuss the possibilities of retaining Wynne. The chances are admittedly slight. Certain matters have to be straightened out and word from Auburn is that this is a remote possibility. The chance, nevertheless, is there, and Auburn is noted for never giving up.

Chet Wynne is slated to arrive in Auburn today from Lansing, Mich., where he went to confer with officials of Michigan State University.

Auburn, because of the machinations of politics, has been unable to obtain any real appropriation from the state in more than a year. The faculty, with rare courage, has been going along on scrip, discounted at banks.

Chet Wynne and his staff won the admiration of the entire Auburn group by carrying on despite the fact that their pay, which was to come from gate receipts but which receipts were placed in the common school fund, had stopped.

The courage and the spirit of the Auburn alumni, students, faculty and coaching staff are really inspiring. Wynne feels that he would be lessening the burden on the school if he retires, now that his contract is at an end. He would prefer to remain at Auburn.

Michigan State, with an athletic association incorporated, is not suffering as are other schools. Hence the ability to take over Wynne as head coach.

Roger Kiley, Wynne's popular assistant, may not coach at all although it is expected that he will aid Wynne in the event he takes the Michigan position. Wynne, who is a successful young lawyer in Chicago, is in politics, being a candidate for alderman in the elections there next month.

Whitlow Wyatt Joins Benedicts

CEDARTOWN, Ga., Jan. 28. Whitlow Wyatt, Cedartown boy who pitches for the Detroit Tigers of the American league in the summer time, has joined the ranks of baseball's benedicts. The young pitcher's marriage to Miss Edna Earle White, of Buchanan, Ga., was solemnized this afternoon at 6:30 o'clock in the First Methodist church there.

The bride is the attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John William White, of Buchanan, and also is a graduate of Lucy Cobb institute. She is a teacher of expression in the Buchanan public schools.

Wyatt is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Wyatt, of Cedartown. He is a graduate of the high school here and also attended Georgia Tech. He went to the Detroit club as a pitcher two years ago after a sensational year at Evansville, Ind.

DANDRUFF Ends Overnight!

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely, and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most it not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and two or three more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It won't cost you more than thirty-five cents (35c). This simple remedy never fails.—(adv.)

ATLANTA, GA., JAN. 29, 1933.

MYRICK SOUNDS A WARNING.

The warning sounded by Senator Myrick, in his address before the annual meeting of the Atlanta Retail Merchants' Association, that unless greater restrictions are placed upon motor bus and truck transportation in Georgia, every interest in the state will suffer, is a gratifying indication that the members of the general assembly are awakening to the seriousness of the situation now existing.

The practically complete destruction of the highway system, that has cost the state more than $100,000,000, is predicted by this able legislator, unless "the motorized freight trains" are taken off the roads.

Senator Myrick warned two years ago that unless the unjust and unfair competition faced by the railroads was brought to an end the rail lines would collapse. His prediction is fast coming true, for half of the railroad mileage in the state is now in the hands of receivers, and a similar fate is certain for the remainder unless relief is given.

Such a complete collapse would be a staggering blow to industry, government and private wealth in Georgia. The state would receive a setback from which it would not recover for many years.

More than half of the county governments of the state will be headed for bankruptcy if they lose the revenue from railway taxes. These governments will have to be abolished or the local tax rates raised to a confiscatory point.

Thousands of railway employes in Georgia would be thrown out of jobs and the communities of the state, large and small alike, would suffer from the loss of buying power on the part of these idle rail workers.

Although purchases of supplies made by the railroads of the country have dropped a billion dollars a year from the average maintained from 1925 to 1929, these purchases still contribute a half billion annually to the industry and commerce of the nation. Georgia is getting her fair share of the benefits of these purchases, but they will be lost if, because of lack of protection from improperly regulated and unfair competition, the railroads are forced into complete collapse.

Such a collapse would wipe out the millions of dollars of Georgia capital now invested in railroad securities, and would necessitate the withdrawal of much of the money now supplying life blood to industry and business in the state.

Senator Myrick, one of Savannah's leading lawyers and an outstanding member of the general assembly for many years, stresses that he has no connection with any railway but that his warning is uttered solely from an unprejudiced realization of the acute danger faced by the state.

There can be no sound argument against the wisdom of his position that the highways of the state should be used more for the convenience of individuals and less for commercial purposes.

If steps to this end are not taken, Georgia will soon have to begin rebuilding her $100,000,000 highway system and 70 or 80 of the county governments will be headed for bankruptcy because of the loss of the taxes the railroads will be no longer able to pay.

We're all fed up with that word "depression." Why not call it "the predicament" or something, just for a change?

EUROPE MORE CHEERFUL.

Reports from London financial and trade centers bring information of improving economic conditions and a more optimistic attitude in practically every European country, despite the fact that most of them are still suffering more or less acutely from the effects of the depression.

Great Britain is made hopeful by the fact that, for the first time in history, no appreciable rise in prices followed the departure of the country from the gold standard and the expectation that sterling will rise in value during the next few months.

In addition, the British have paid the United States much more on her war debts than she has received from her war debtors. They are now hopeful that a better balance in this respect may be expected in the near future, and it is confidently expected that the prompt payment by Great Britain of the December 15 debt installment will pave the way to sweeping revisions at the conferences to be held in Washington.

A marked renewal of confidences is reported in Germany, largely due to the feeling that the reparations question, so far as that country is concerned, is closed. While the unemployment situation is still critical there has been a slight reduction in the number of those out of work, and it seems fairly certain that Germany will come through the winter without a breakdown and without serious political disturbances.

Italy is probably in the best condition and has the most optimistic spirit of any nation on the continent. It is by no means enjoying a period of prosperity, but there is less uncertainty about the future than in any other European country, and as a result industry is persevering despite the serious handicap of worldwide conditions. Somewhat the same situation of relative cheerfulness exists in Belgium.

France appears to be weathering the winter fairly well after feeling the real pinch of the depression for the first time last year. During the early period of the depression she kept her industry and trade in much better condition than those of other countries through favorable trade treaties with the Balkan states and orders from her African territories. Now such mid-European countries as Austria, Rumania and Bulgaria have so curtailed their imports as to largely decrease the orders placed in France, despite the favorable treaties.

On the whole, the European situation can be considered as distinctly improved, not in respect to any material increases in commerce nor in decreased unemployment but in greater confidence and stability.

The most hopeful feature of this improved condition is that it offers a sounder foundation upon which to rebuild collapsed international trade and will make more easily attainable such economic objectives as will be decided upon in the war debt discussions to be held in the near future between the United States and Great Britain.

It's a nice plan. Ten cotton planters reduce their crops to raise the price for the planter who doubles his crop.

A BOOST FOR BARTER.

The federal government is to be asked by representatives of a large group of economists, college presidents and professors, recently in session at Princeton, to make an investigation of the various systems of barter, now in existence throughout the country, to ascertain whether or not they are rendering valuable service in the relief of unemployment and the exchange of basic commodities.

Barter centers have been established in many cities and a few rural districts to effect the exchange of goods and foods. In Detroit there is a large market where unemployed artisans, such as bootmakers and cabinet makers, may exchange their handiwork for foods of various kinds. In other cities similar barter centers have been established with, it is claimed, entirely successful results.

The barter centers in the rural sections largely deal in farm products and farm equipment. A farmer who has an extra plow or wagon, but who needs corn or oats, can barter at these centers with another farmer who has a surplus of these crops, to the mutual benefit of both.

The success of these centers has been so marked, it is claimed, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is being urged to consider the advisability of permitting the use of its loans in establishing such barter marts.

The sponsors of the suggestion to dot the country with barter centers hold that they can be conducted without withholding trade from established lines of business. The centers, they say, are for those without money and who could not for that reason patronize local retail business establishments.

The proposal contemplates the putting of a large number of those now unemployed to work at the production of goods for barter, thus aiding in the solution of that problem, and being of further help in lessening the burden on private and public relief agencies.

There is little chance that government co-operation will be given to such a scheme, but certainly there lies in the barter center a suggested activity for local communities by which the exchange of food for commodities would materially reduce suffering and deprivation among the unemployed and the farmers to secure many articles they have no money to buy.

If people aren't sent back to earth as punishment, why does the stork treat innocent infants that way?

PENSIONS HERE AND ABROAD.

Statistics announced by General Frank T. Hines, director of the veterans' bureau, clearly reveal why the pension load in the United States is so much greater than in the other principal nations involved in the World War.

Veterans to the number of 776,812 are now receiving direct money benefits, although there were only 234,300 wounded casualties in the American army during the war. While the United States is thus paying for disabilities totaling three times as many men as were actually wounded, Great Britain and France are paying pensions to only one out of four of those who were wounded.

The annual report made by the administrator of the veterans' bureau on June 30, 1932, shows that the various pension, compensation and disability allowance rolls were made up at that time as follows:

Disability compensation, service connected	328,658
Death compensation for dependents	97,448
Disability allowance for permanent disabilities, not service connected	407,584
Total	833,690
Pensions former wars, including officers' retirement payments	444,356
Grand total	1,278,056

Director Hines estimates that, based on the soldiers killed and wounded in the American army, we are now making annual pension payments per man of $2,668, as against $58 for Great Britain and $51 for France. These annual payments, based on the number of men mobilized, are $180 for the United States, $98.64 for Canada, $34.09 for France, $26.49 for Great Britain, $22.98 for Germany and $12.44 for Italy.

General Hines points out that while theoretically the United States has no pensions, our disability allowances are in reality pensions. These allowances during the past two fiscal years have amounted to $75,000,000. At this rate the annual payments in 20 years will reach $800,000,000. At the end of the last fiscal year 900,000 World War veterans had applied for these payments, and applications were still coming in at the rate of 20,000 a month.

Aside from regular pension payments, disability compensation has cost to date more than $1,700,000,000.

Taking the care extended by the United States in the past to its former soldiers as a criterion, General Hines predicts that the total cost by 1950 will grow to approximately $2,000,000,000 and will then slowly dwindle to $1,500,000,000 in 1966. He estimates that in 20 years' time there will be 3,300,000 names on the various rolls.

Annual payments of $2,000,000,000 for the care of former soldiers would put a staggering burden on the taxpayers of the United States. On the basis of 150,000,000 population in 1950, every family of five in the country would have to contribute more than $70 a year to this single governmental expenditure.

The present system has come into existence by piecemeal. The wisely devised war risk insurance plan, which it was hoped would inaugurate a new era in veterans' relief, failed because four-fifths of the men allowed their policies to lapse. The original basic theory that compensation payment should be for injuries or disease incurred in line of duty has been almost entirely abandoned.

The Boston Herald warns that "nobody knows where it will all end," and points out that—

If the depression had not come along, the evil would still be growing, session by session. The beneficiaries would have become so numerous hardly a congressman would have dared to stand up against them. There is little probability that the laws will be liberalized while the budget is unbalanced, but unless positive abuses are corrected in this period of retrenchment, we may as well make up our minds that we are in for a national program which will load us more and more heavily for a generation or two.

No citizen of the United States would withhold a pension honestly deserved, but the comparative figures presented by General Hines present ample reason for wonder as to whether or not our pensioners are limited to this class.

Every man whose earning power has been lessened because of physical disabilities incurred during his war service is entitled to recompense from his government, but certainly the disparity between the payments in this country and in others indicate that we are carrying an unreasonably heavy pension burden.

When the doctor says you need a winter-resort vacation, he means he'd rather do without the money than to monkey with you.

WHY 5,500 BANKS HAVE FAILED.

The need for reform in the banking system in the United States in order that the depositor's dollar shall be as safe in this country as it is in others is stressed by Theodore M. Knappen, widely known commentator on financial matters, in an article under the heading, "Banks Do Not Fail in Other Countries," in the Magazine of Wall Street.

Mr. Knappen feels that there should be no surprise over the failure of 5,500 banks in the United States during the past four years "because 5,500 of them were unsound," and that nothing more could have been expected from a situation that finds it "possible to start a national bank with nothing but a handsome seal and $25,000; a state bank with $10,000 in promissory notes as capital, and when newly arrived adventurers in boom towns are wont to flip a coin for a decision as to a venture in banking, gambling or a saloon."

Our present laws, the writer holds, not only put a premium on lax banking, but have limited the growth of strong banks by prohibiting branch banking. The absence of such branches, he feels, has "not only compelled the existence of small banks but has infallibly destined many of them to be weak."

Mr. Knappen is of the opinion that the most fundamental and meritorious provision of the Glass bill, just passed by the senate and which now goes to the house for consideration, is the plan to extend the field of national branch banking, and cites that Canada has not had a single failure during the depression under its system of branch banking—a system consisting of ten banks with 3,800 domestic branches, providing a banking agency for every 3,000 people against one for every 6,000 people in the United States.

This financial authority sees the inevitable adoption of some sort of branch-banking system in the United States, probably a regionally restricted one furnishing systems large enough, strong enough and sufficiently diversified in patronage to weather any storm, but he warns that—with branch-banking must come not only more rigid banking statutes but greater powers of public supervision and control. The failure of a single great branch bank system, in Canada for example, would be equivalent to the failure of more than 600 or 700 small United States banks and the psychological shock would be worse. A big bank with many supporting branches is not necessarily a sound bank; but most small banks are inherently unsound, in the severest sense of the word, simply because they are small and isolated.

Whatever the fate of the Glass bill, it is clear that some radical steps must be taken to reform the banking system in the United States, and reasonably certain that sooner or later these reforms will include some type of branch banking.

The New Yorker says Louis Gruenberg is "the oldest of four sons and four daughters." Doubtless also the youngest of his parents.

The democrats should be careful about their mandate. The allies got a lot of them and they turned out to be liabilities.

There will be no reform until the ultimate consumer realizes that he is also the ultimate sucker.

True, it takes buyers to make the land rich; but those who do the buying aren't the ones who get the riches.

It is dumb to call it a living wage if the death rate is lower among those who make more.

Soaking the city man to help the farmer sounds wicked if you forget the tariff that soaks the farmer to help the city man.

But even if they harness the lightning to make money, all the little man will get is thunder.

The Baltimore Sun speaks of "the dole given to unscratched veterans." Probably means the ones who never felt a cootie.

Technocracy teaches us one thing. Just when it seemed the American sucker had reached bottom, it shows there are still unplumbed depths of idiocy.

Atlantan Protests Starvation Fare, Meager Support of Most State Agencies Because Highway Funds Held Sacred

Editor Constitution: Highway funds, which constitute two-thirds of the total revenues of our state, have been set aside, and by a process of illogical conclusions, held to be the peculiar property of the state highway department, as agent for the motorists of the state. The agency is declared to be created for the building of more roads and the preservation of the roads.

The truth is that Georgia has been bleeding herself for the support of the highway department—both as regards individuals with their homes mortgaged and their farms taken from them; and the state as an institution, with a three-year mounting deficit. We have traded our birthright of a landed people for the porridge of a joy-riding and road-building spree. Now with our porridge thin and cooled, with our people and state plastered with debt, we contemplate with such satisfaction as we may our magnificent roads running by deserted farms.

Where are those millions of pleasure seekers who would travel luxuriously over glass-smooth surfaces? Where are those businessmen who were to shuttle back and forth with no delay expediting and increasing our volume of trade? Alas! both business and pleasure must wait on money. Our money is gone.

Only one branch of our state government is prosperous. That branch receives two-thirds of our total revenues—twice as much as is expended by the state for schools, courts, jails, legislature, executive department, pensions. While other departments are hopelessly in debt, this department can plan new work to the tune of millions of dollars. Any effort to divert the funds of the highway department for the relief of the other sorely taxed departments meets with fierce opposition.

Advocates of a non-divertable highway fund argue that as this money comes through tags and gasoline taxes from the motorist, it cannot be ethically used for any other cause than road-building and maintenance. The motorists do not constitute a class—Taxpayer John Jones owns among other mortgaged chattels an old automobile, which he has not bought for motoring, but for the purpose of transporting himself to business and his family to school and to church. This John Jones is sorely taxed on his home, on his smoking tobacco, on his little business. If you can relieve him of some of these taxes he will appreciate it and forgive you for any errors of reason you may make in rendering this relief. If you follow your logic in this matter into other matters, you should use the tobacco tax for the benefit of the smoker, the ad valorem tax for the benefit of the property owners, and you should tax the schools for their maintenance and the jails for their upkeep.

The legislators should realize that the taxpayers do not care what pocket it comes out of. They want the money they have paid out of depleted pockets used for tax relief. We have a home, tax-ridden and mortgage-covered; we have a business, tax-ridden and bank-indebted. We must have homes and businesses. We can get along with the roads we have, at least for the time being.

Holds Rural Educational Conditions Reflection on the People of Georgia

Editor Constitution: The condition of rural education in certain sections of this state, as well as in other states, challenges our interest and should challenge definite action on the part of all friends of the schools. Soon, schools in a number of counties will begin closing at the end of from five to seven-month terms.

Investigation will show that, in hundreds of districts over the state, schools begin closing as early as February 1 or March 1. In these schools the teachers are underpaid, the buildings are inadequately equipped and the children in many instances, because of drastic retrenchment, are suffering from inferior instruction. There are quite a few reasons for this crippled situation and enforced sacrifice in educational effort.

The fact that the state owes the university system and the common school system almost $5,000,000, when the total state indebtedness is only $7,000,000, is a disgrace. If a united constituency, composed of informed teachers and patrons of the schools, had brought the proper pressure to bear at the proper time upon our state executives and legislators, this very noticeable and unfair discrimination could have been prevented.

Many justifiable criticisms may be directed at the school system of this state. Many contradictions, inconsistencies and inefficiences exist in our methods of standardization, certification and required methods of instruction. Despite the so-called requirements, we find inferior and unqualified teachers competing with trained professionals for the same positions. When we care to observe, it is very evident that gross educational inequality exists in Georgia. We expect communities with limited resources to measure up to the required standards or forfeit a disproportionate state-aid fund when we have failed to provide adequate supervision and also failed to render the necessary financial aid.

Our method of textbook adoption by the state is weighted with many evils. From the standpoint of the child, the worst is the lack of inclusive material used relating to and applicable to the particular needs of the several differing climatic and agricultural areas of the state. Also, we have failed to present to the people as a whole systematic learning as a vital force and have stood by without protest when the common school system has been exploited in behalf of other interests not so important to the future prosperity of the state. And exploitation isn't all, we maintain a system of financial school support by methods of taxation which are outworn, ineffective, and actually pernicious.

Still, even if the teachers and educational officials have tolerated certain preventable, yet deplorable conditions, is it not true that the local boards and the direct patrons of the schools have failed in the performance of necessary duties as well? We as a people, in some sections, have not been school-minded. The local school boards and the parents of the children in this country have more power and influence in connection with the operation of the schools than similar groups have in any other civilized country. It is true that many current problems are beyond the active jurisdiction and influence of these groups. But why are we so indifferent to the inevitable need for educational training among all classes? Have we not yet realized that the pioneer period of rugged empire building is over and that now a higher culture is necessary if our children are to rise above poverty, ignorance and narrowness? Have we the right to deny these children the necessary skills, the happiness, and the general enrichment which comes of broad educational advantages?

Present Railroad Rates Relics of Boom Period, Writes This Atlantan

Editor Constitution: Have just read with interest your editorial in today's paper, "The Transportation Problem," also the piece by Mr. Stanley of the Seaboard Air Line railway. Traveling continually, I prefer the rails, but there is such a saving by the busses that I am forced to use them many times against my preference.

I go from Atlanta to Columbus quite often, and the train has been carrying from three to six passengers. Sunday they put on a rate of $2 and I counted 44 passengers. The same expense per train, whether 44 at $2 or six passengers at $4.17.

If the railroads would cut out ridiculously low rates for week-end trips, when nobody wants to travel, and make a reasonable rate for every day, they would soon regain their volume. The present passenger rate and the Pullman surcharge are relics of the war and the boom period and cannot survive.

Suggests New Plan Of Representation In House and Senate

Editor Constitution: I heartily indorse most of your recent editorial on the unfair and unjust county unit system. Now that the legislature is in session its evil is again made apparent. Under this system a small per cent of the population can defeat any legislation, however meritorious. There can be no real democratic government while it is possible for less than a majority to rule. Echols, Quitman and Dade, with a combined population of only 10,710, have the same voting power as Fulton's 325,000 population.

The same inequalities are found in the senatorial districts, ranging from 350,000 in the thirty-fifth to 14,485 in the thirty-second. Ten districts—the second, twelfth, fourteenth, fifteenth, twenty-first, twenty-eighth, thirty-second, thirty-ninth and fortieth—combined have just a fraction more population than the thirty-fifth, and yet they have ten times its voting strength.

The consolidation of counties is not the solution, for the consolidations will only be with the larger counties and their unit strength will remain the same. Fulton has absorbed Milton and Campbell and she still has only three votes. There is talk of merging with DeKalb, and should that be done, DeKalb would lose her three votes while Fulton would gain none.

In the interest of economy and fairness, how would a plan like this do? Divide the state into 99 representative districts and 33 senatorial districts. Each of the representative districts would have approximately 29,277 population. Under this plan, Fulton would elect eleven, Chatham four, Bibb and Jones three, etc., combining enough small counties to make the ratio. The same territory that elected three representatives would elect one senator. If ten men can represent Georgia in the United States congress, why can't 99 see after her home affairs? If two senators can properly represent us in the United States senate, why can't 33 senators look after our interests in the Georgia senate?

Hoarders Are Doing More To Prolong Depression Than All Other Influences

Editor Constitution: Were there a law making it a penal offense to contribute to the depression—aid in its prolongation—who would be the first man brought into court?

There's a fellow who is doing more to retard the country's recovery today than all the loafers, thieves and gangsters combined! He is recognized socially, even belongs and gives to the church. Who is this undesirable citizen, this malign enemy to society, who is keeping the bread from the mouths and the clothes from the backs of an enormous, fast-increasing percentage of this country's population?

Meet Mr. Hoarder; his other name is Legion. The amazing thing is that in possibly nine cases out of ten he is in many senses a good man, is not conscious of his guilt—of the enormity of his offense against society, against his country—every country—and is his own worst enemy. Many of him will tell you that he puts his money in the bank. True; some of it, but most of it is hidden out and very little of that he banks is on time deposit. Nearly all of it probably subject to instant withdrawal and, for that reason, cannot be loaned during depression.

Another amazing thing is the obvious fact that hoarding is the worst thing Mr. Hoarder can do with his own money. Why? For the simple reason that the greatest opportunity opened to anyone by depression, and that's wide open, is investment at current prices. Let him take his hoardings and buy farm lands, or farm products in warehouses, or city property, or some conservative bond, and when recovery and expansion come, as come they will, the earned increment will be his.

Take the other side of the medal, Mr. Hoarder. Suppose you continue the chimney-crevice, bed-tick policy of hiding your savings. When prosperity comes, you may wake up and find your $100 or your $1,000 will, at the advanced prices, buy far less than it will today at depression prices. And, Mr. Hoarder, remember this: As long as you continue hoarding, just that long will big banks be afraid to lend, and the depression last, and your own money continue to depreciate in value. This disastrous depression is very largely your responsibility. Gather up your cash, your savings and hoardings, buy property at probably 60 per cent of its real worth, and the banks will lend far more freely, unemployment will gradually lessen, the needy be clothed and fed, and both you and your country will prosper. Mark this—now that prices have reached the bottom—the longer you hoard your dollar the less it will be worth.

TEXT AND PRETEXT

BY M. ASHBY JONES.

Refuge and Strength.

Let the preacher be conventional this morning and announce his text at the beginning: "God is my refuge and my strength." It is taken from a very old poem. It is an interesting fact that the first expression of religion to be found is in the form of poetry. It is not an accident. The religious instinct and the poetic is the same. It is the effort to interpret the world of the five senses, in terms of the spirit. In these words I have quoted, we have the spirit's defiance of the material world.

The man we call the "practical man" is usually distrustful of poetry. He is satisfied with the answer which his eyes and ears give him, when he questions the world around him. He insists that is the real world. Thus he becomes dependent for his happiness upon the satisfactions, which life yields to his five senses. To him a "successful" man is one who accumulates the things which give satisfaction to the body. When these things are destroyed, or his plans for accumulation fail, life is bad. He has no haven. His only redemption is to mend the broken things, or to start over again with the old task of accumulation.

Spiritual Insight.

Religion, like poetry, refuses to accept as final the testimony of the five senses. It has the poetic insight. It does not strive to ignore, or overlook, the world of the five senses, but seeks to look into these things, which can be seen and touched. Perhaps religion's great discovery is that things are not valuable in themselves, but only represent values. Things have a meaning beneath the surface of touch and sight. What the practical man calls the wealth and the good of life, has no lasting good in itself, but only represents a good which may be. It holds that genuine success is to discover what good is. So religion does not bid men cease accumulating things—digging in the earth, making machines—but insists that they recognize that things are not an end within themselves, but only a means to a higher end.

Religion proclaims that there is an intangible and invisible world, which is the real world. Here are the specifications. It is the world of honor and knowledge, of confidences and comradeships, of truth and beauty, of loyalties and loves. It insists that things which can be weighed and marketed are only valuable as they become the servants of these spiritual ideas. Only as they are the symbols, or representatives of honor, loyalty and love, are they good.

This spiritual insight which we are talking about reveals this world as a God-world. The meaning which it finds, back of all which can be seen and heard, is God. It gladly welcomes the testimony which comes from every realm of experience, whether it be from the laboratory or the factory, and then seeks to interpret it. So religion tells astronomy that "the heavens declare the glory of God;" the botanist that "God doth clothe the lily;" the geologist that "there are sermons in stones, and books in running brooks."

To Master the material.

So far from all of this being impractical, it is a man's protection and redemption, in a material world. The five senses reveal a world of destruction and death. No house or fortress has ever been builded by hands so strong as to keep out sorrow, and pain and disappointment. There has never been any wealth accumulated in barns and banks immune from thieves and rust. There is no refuge or strength in the five senses. So we ask religion what does all this seeming death and destruction mean? The reply is, it is simply change, a new birth, bringing forth new life.

A faith that love is at the heart of the universe—that love is God, and we are His children—is an impregnable fortress. There come experiences when every man must have a haven from the pressure of sorrow and disappointment. For the time he must dwell within the consciousness of God's nearness. He must not stay there. He must go back into life and deal with things which rust, meet difficulties, solve problems, and bear burdens. But he will go stronger in body and clearer in mind, because of this refuge and this strength.

But religion is vastly more than a mere escape from the material world. It is the means by which we may master the material world. It is more than not to serve mammon, it is nothing less than to make mammon serve God. With faith that the God of love is the creator of all things, we may learn from Him, to make all things with which we work, express the true, the beautiful and the good.

Paternalism and Not Communism Offers Most Serious Threat to the United States

Editor Constitution: Not communism nor bolshevism, of which we hear so much, threatens American institutions. Something far worse is active among the people. Paternalism saturates public and private life to an alarming extent. Individual responsibility, accountability, initiative and independence have already to a very large extent fallen into desuetude.

Examples are all about us. The habit of looking to government for every-day necessities has terminated in a widespread and disgraceful distribution of food and raiment. It is no longer shameful to be a dependent upon the public for support; indeed, there has grown up a system by which shrewd money-grubbers, employers, safely reduce their own obligations to wage earners by procuring assistance from the politicians through this distribution.

The "poor farmer" has been reduced from a proud position of independent eminence by a special of despicable demagogy practiced by the back-patting self-seeker in office; has been weaned away from exertions by himself in his own behalf. He has been led to believe that by somebody else's efforts he is to prosper.

The precedent was set many years ago—at the expense of the farmer, too—when government agreed that part of the honest earnings of agriculture should be diverted, unearned, into the pockets of industry. The pampered pets of politicians who have thus fattened off uncomprehending victims of a protective tariff might, if they saw fit to do so, see the effects of that long-continued diversion of earnings in the rising demand from all other sources to be taken under the paternalistic wing. But they were the first mendicants and they want to remain exclusively in that situation.

What they, nor, apparently, any statesman of today, do not discern, is the actual fact that only by the utter destruction of the protective tariff system under which public taxes are greatly augmented, not for public benefit but for private gain and greed, can democracy be restored to America. In time the universal cry for public support would disappear, the high taxes now going to industry would go to the government and the mad search for other, different and various impositions for government maintenance would be rendered unnecessary. Any statistician could show that this tariff tax for private gain is practically equal to the excise, income, internal and nuisance taxes now collected for government. From this basis there is justification for the pleas of those not in protected industry that they, too, should share in paternal favoritism, even down to the farmer who fails or refuses to grow on his own ground the little required to keep himself and his family in decent and respectable independence.

Inflation of Currency Would Benefit All and Injure None, Holds Tyler

Editor Constitution: I wish to commend you for your recent editorials advocating inflation of the currency.

You well state that "economic stability can not be expected without a stable currency." That is true.

The statement comes from some sources that we have today the most stable currency on earth. That is far from true. There can be nothing stable about any money that has risen almost double in value over a period of three years. Suppose the dollar had dropped in value as radically as it has risen? What would those opposing inflation have done about it? They would have importuned congress long ago to enact measures of stabilization.

How in the world can any of us who contracted debts three or four years ago—and 75 per cent of us did—ever hope to pay off the load under the present situation. Not only the farmer with a mortgage and the small home owner, but the large real estate holder, heretofore counted as well-to-do, faces a situation it will take more than one lifetime to clarify.

And, from a strictly moral standpoint, why should the debtor have to pay off? Here is a situation he is no more responsible for than the man in the moon. No lack of industry, honesty or business acumen has brought him to his condition. In the ordinary course of things, he is expected to take a chance on the usual slight fluctuations in values, but here he is confronted by something revolutionary in nature, a wiping-out process brought on by no fault whatever of his own.

So far as I am able to reason, inflation of the dollar to its value of three yearsa go could bring no injury to any class of our economic life.

At any rate, why should the entire economic life of the country be allowed to collapse in order to hold on to a fairy-like conception of the dollar?

The best minds in the country, and those among our leaders who we know to have the best interests of the country at heart, favor inflation, and the members of congress appear to be waiting only to hear from the folks back home.

But will the people ever awake?

Aside from the immediate results of saving the country from complete collapse, inflation would also help to break the grip of Wall Street on the major industries of the country. And this grip will have to be broken sooner or later.

Terrell Holds Local Boards of Education Cannot Be Abolished

Editor Constitution: It is all wrong for the compilers of a new school code to get our local school people all wrought up and hot and bothered about putting a law in the new code to abolish our board of education and give control of our school system into the hands of the state school board or whoever runs the public schools of this state. It can't be done.

Somebody thought of that some time ago, and as a result the old boys who made up the constitution of 1877 provided by article 8, section 5, paragraph 1, of that instrument that local systems of schools should not be interferred with by the constitution itself, and as a consequence, if they cannot be interferred with by the constitution, they certainly cannot be by the general assembly.

Atlanta's school system was in full blast at that time in substantially its present form.

DeKalb County Citizen Doubts Talmadge Win Was Political Accident

Editor Constitution: I am quite sure that the citizens of DeKalb county regret the intemperate allegations made by their representative, Mr. Lindsay, in his official capacity before the legislature.

Surely the facts do not sustain his allegation that Mr. Talmadge is a political accident. I should rather think that the result of the recent election looked more like a political cyclone.

There were a lot of good people in Georgia that did not support Talmadge for governor, and this was particularly true in DeKalb county, but I believe that everybody in Georgia, with the exception, perhaps, of Mr. Lindsay, will admit that Mr. Talmadge went to "plowing" the first day the season opened, and is trying to sow some good seed from which the people will reap a bountiful harvest.

I hope before the legislature adjourns that Mr. Lindsay, on sober thought, will do himself the justice by apologizing to the legislature for his intemperate speech.

Uncertainty Surrounding Date of Oglethorpe's Birth Is Removed by Bicentennial Commission Research

Investigation in London Reveals That Parents of Founder of Georgia Gave Same Name to Two Sons.

The uncertainty which has existed over the date of the birth of General James Oglethorpe, founder of Georgia, because of conflicting records in London, has been cleared away as the result of research in England during 1932 by Miss Willie David O'Kelley, of the chair of history at the Georgia State College for Women at Milledgeville. Early in the year Miss O'Kelley was commissioned by the Georgia bicentennial commission, which was named by action of the state legislature, to go to England to study the aged church records bearing on the birth of Oglethorpe. The manner in which she was able to definitely set the day the founder of the Georgia colony was born is told by Miss O'Kelley in the following article, written especially for The Constitution.

By MISS WILLIE DAVID O'KELLY,
Chair of History, Georgia State College for Women, Milledgeville, Ga.

To Georgians the life of General James Edward Oglethorpe is always one of interest, but it has been disconcerting to have questions go unanswered that have arisen with the passing years about the details of his life as important as the year of his birth and therefore the age he had reached when he died, and also whether he had two names at the time of his christening or if, indeed, he was christened with only one name, our historians have been in doubt about all these points and have, therefore, differed about them.

With the circumstances all in hand these differences are easily explained. However, the misleading has been well grounded because the reports have been traced to two different churches in London that gave different information, which has been interpreted to be the same person. Then the question arose as to why there should have been two churches involved in the record of the birth and baptism of the founder.

Any student worthy of the title feels hesitant about doubting any official record that might be found in England! As a matter of fact one who might be prone to doubt even for a good reason would want to be sure of himself and to know what he was talking about before he expressed his doubt and to have the proof ready to defend himself and his thesis. Because material stored in England in any official archive, be it a church or elsewhere, deserves to be there by no uncertain loophole. The records in the churches give one the assurance of having been kept with care for centuries, and anyone who dared question the baptism of a baby of one day old would have thrust on himself the disapproval of the ages. Instead, one feels in the presence of these records, one bows in reverence that the written evidence of a life should have remained all during the life of such person and on down the ages after their spirits have flown. However, one has to convince the verger, the church official who guards the record, before being admitted to such holy source material, for certainly a verger has no doubt in his mind when an outsider is admitted.

Date of Birth Established.

During the summer now just past, while studying the life of General Oglethorpe at the British Museum in London, I learned that James Edward Oglethorpe was born December 22, 1696, and was baptized the second day of his life at the well-known church, St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, which is just off Trafalgar Square, in the heart of London. I felt surely that they had made some error about his being baptized when he was only one day old! Surely in my research work I had come across this statement before in America, but if I had it had made such a little impression that I was astonished now that I was in a position to go right to the church and prove that bold statement! Indeed, I was right there in the city where the general whose life I was studying was spent, at least the early part of it. I left my study for the moment, however, and went to that source of information about the English persons who are worthy to be studied, that wonderful national biography, the idea that America, that is, the United States, has finally decided to copy.

Turn to the Life of James Edward Oglethorpe (Volume 42, Page 43 of the National Biography), where the record reads just what I have said above about his birth and that he was baptized December 23, 1696! Well, I dared not doubt where anyone could hear me, so I determined all the more to go to St. Martin's-in-the-Fields to see the record for myself. So I went three times, each time to find the verger not in. The fourth time he was there but had been in a conference for two hours and little hope. (I learned that the little hope meant, little hope of his getting out.) As I had credentials with me he came to speak to me, but I told him I would wait indefinitely, just so he did not leave before I saw that book. The kind verger was amused that "You Americans do mean business, don't you?" But the twilights are delightfully long in England in the summer and as the libraries were already closed for the day I felt happy to wait there. "I suppose you are aware," the verger told me before he returned to his waiting committee, "that this is the parish church of the king and queen?"

To answer my questioned look, he said further, "By that I mean that this is the church that belongs to His Majesty, the King, in the sense that he worships here!" And with that he pointed out to me the pews of the rulers in England. "These are the downstairs pews," he said, and showed me the private pews upstairs.

He saw that I was delighted, and he answered the question that I had not dared ask, "Yes," he laughed, as he said it, "it will be all right for you to sit there!"

And I hastened to ask, if it would not be disrespectful to look at the song or hymn book of Your Majesty? "His Majesty," he corrected me quickly. "Certainly," he continued good-naturedly, "and more than that, you may sing a song from it, only don't sing so loud that I cannot finish my meeting."

No wonder we love England! They are so good to us when we are there! I just love the nice King George, and I find myself wishing I could run down town in the rain to see the king go riding by—with all the king's horses. . . .

Such a grand place to wait! But the time would pass all too soon, it always did all the summer, I wished for every minute to be two. I hurried to sit in the king's pew, even if the verger did have fun about it, I did not care, I just had to wait a part of my time there! There were things that I wanted to do, but first I simply must see the hymn book of the king. (The thoughtless verger told me later, that it was not likely the one that the king ever saw, but I know it was—for it was right there, and no one dare move what a king has so placed, though, of course, I had enjoyed that hymn book, and I just know by the way it felt, kind of different-like, that it was the king's.)

When the royal family enter a store or shop or place of business that fortunate establishment puts the British coat of arms near the entrance of the place, in gold and the words or similar as the case may be, "By Appointment to His Majesty the King." These letters are also in gold, so I knew that that emblem would be somewhere about the front of the King's Parish church. So at once, just as soon as I could pull myself away from the pew where the king worshiped, I went in search of that emblem, and there it was right over the entrance to the church. I had to get outside of the church to see it, and once I had seen it, I knew the verger was right, so I slipped back at the head of the steps to breath again in the midst of such importance, and to love anew the founder of the colony of Georgia, and as I thought of what he left in England to go to Georgia when it was only Georgia then in theory, I looked out onto the monument of George Washington standing in front of the National Art Gallery, and on farther down into the beautiful Trafalgar Square with the piece of the iron lions at the base of the Nelson monument (pillar as it is called there) as it towers far above the crowds and the streets and the restless fountains that go on and on forever, a group of "old faithfuls," who, though unacquainted with war, are full of glory!

London! Who wouldn't love London!

Wording of the Record.

But here they were calling me, for the verger was waiting. I was so sorry that he had finished his other engagement, but in a moment I was in the presence of the book I had been so anxious to see. But the book's presence filled me with awe, and when I was asked the date which I sought, I had to write it, as I could not seem to find my power of speech. (The verger knew though that I could talk because of our conversation about the king's hymn book.)

There the record was in black and white:

"December and January, 1696" (the heading at the top of the page)

"Baptised December 23.

Born December 22, 1696. James Edward Oglethorp (without the final e) of Coll. Theophilus and Eleanora."

(Many old records have "January, 1696-7," for instance for the beginning of a new year, it seemed that there was a kind of binding the two yeas together, and this record has the two months of December and January, 1696, which means December, 1696, and the next month would actually be 1697. Old books also have at the bottom of the page printed below the last line and the last word on the last line the word that will be found on the following page at the top, or the first word on the next page.)

At once I asked the verger, if he supposed that they had actually baptised the baby when it was only one day old? He assured me that they had, as it was not only an official record, but that the parents were anxious for the baptism of the child as they were always afraid an infant would die outside of the church, and unbaptised.

This record answered many questions for me: I saw for a fact that he was born on the date of December 22, 1696, and as his death is not contested as to time, he would have been at the time of his death in 1785, the age of 89 years. Then again, another thing was cleared up in my mind: the founder of the colony of Georgia had the two names James Edward.

Although there were many points of my research study that I was unable to do while I was in England, for lack of time, still I was very happy as I crossed the Atlantic that to my own satisfaction at least, I had some information about the founder of the colony of Georgia that told me beyond doubt a few things of his life that I had not had proof for before. I wondered how these differences of opinion arose about so important a person, and if they were groundless, why had we allowed them to exist all this time?

But my satisfied feeling was not to last indefinitely! Soon after I returned to Georgia, I was informed that an article had been published that had cleared up some doubts about the matter of doubts of the age, birth and some other points about the life of the great benefactor, General Oglethorpe! To my utter surprise, I learned that the person who had published such record had also found his information in London, this same summer, and that his record was taken from a church record from a church of no less importance than St. James, Piccadilly! Also after talking to him, I learned that his facts were just as real to him as were mine to me.

My first impluse was that the other party was wrong, indeed how could he be otherwise? We compared notes; we tried to explain, and left with each of us knowing that we were right, even if the other were not wrong. What was I to do? I had my material for the Georgia bicentennial commission to use, as they had sent me to England to get this material, and I could not let them think that I had failed to get every point that I could on such a question as this, and then, too, I was not going to let them think for once that they had selected someone who was not willing to find out the truth about this thing.

I had to do something. What was I to do? There were three persons who had answered many questions for me while I was in London, and also since I returned. The next mail letter to te one who could get this intook a letter to the one who could get this information for me in the biggest hurry. I asked that the records of both St. James, Piccadilly, and St. Martins-in-the-Fields, be copied verbatim and sent to me. Meanwhile, as it takes a little while to get response from a letter to England, I returned to my notes to examine them, though in due time the information reached me from my good English friends.

Another James Oglethorpe.

The records from the two churches upon arrival, left me in a fix that was worse off than I thought. Indeed I was depending on this information to make the correction of these two bits of information, and to show which of us was right. But alas, it brought the record of mine, just as I had taken it in London from St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, and also just as the other student had taken his from St. James, Piccadilly, the latter being:

"Baptism, June 2, 1689; James Oglethorp (without the final e) of Sir Theophilus and his wife Lady Elinor, b. l.; Born, June 1, 1689."

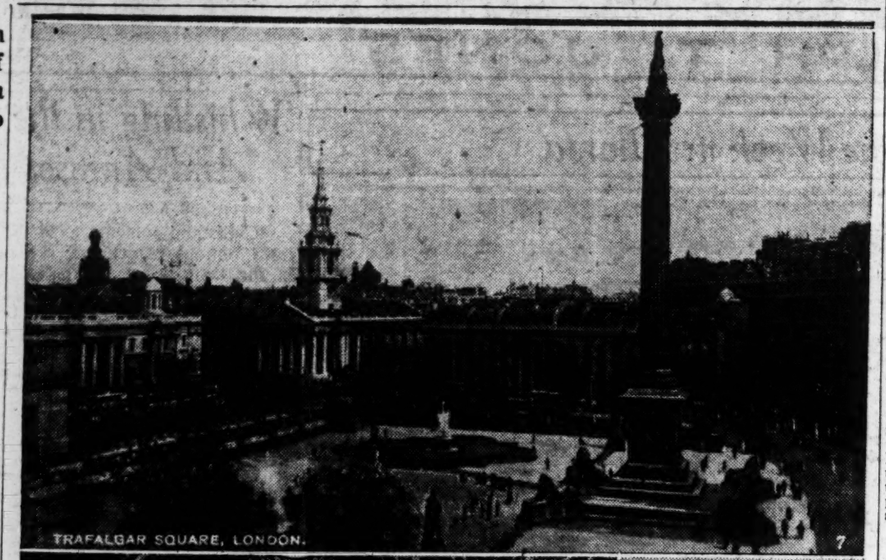

So I was no better off. Both students were right, we both had records from churches that we could not doubt nor deny.

My last resort was to go to the notes I had taken in London, from the British museum, and the public records office. When I referred to the notes I had taken of the life of General James Edward Oglethorpe, I learned that I had written there the fact that there were two children in the family who were given the same name of James. How I could have taken the notes and then have allowed them to slip my mind in any such fashion, I can only explain, that I relied on my notes for things that I had written there, and used my memory for things that I could not write or takes notes on. I do recall that I was upset about the fact that the little child was baptized the second day of his life.

The dates of the birth of the older son were identical with the dates of my friend who had done the research work in London, and returned to Georgia before I had and published the results of his findings from the Church of St. James, Piccadilly. That son had he lived to the date of 1785, which is the uncontested date of the death of the founder of the colony of Georgia, would have been 96 years old at that time. Another thing that is explained is that the older son, of whom we are speaking here, was christened as James, which explains why some historians give his name as only James. However, the other record, that of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, gives the younger son's name as James Edward, with the birth date as December 22, 1696, making him at the date of his death aged 89 years.

Just as we both were sure, the English records will do to depend on! We were both right, which is a ridiculous way for an argument to end! I was reminded of an argument that I was a party to in Italy once. The pharmacist to whom I went to make, or to try to make, a purchase could not understand what I was trying to say. He thought he understood enough English to get along with for his trade, and I was sure that I could make myself understood even if I could not understand what was said to me. As we endeavored to talk, I changed the way of saying things I was trying to ask for, and finally resorted to the effort to find something that I could make him understand. We had both just about decided that the other was impossible, and had raised our voices to the point of breaking in our effort to be understood, only to have our attention attracted to a noise greater than our even. To our disguest these persons were convulsed with laughter at us, for, as they said, we were both saying the same thing finally.

This one family with two recorded names of sons born seven years apart, and recorded in different London churches, leaves us in the dark as to why they should have recorded the dates or rather had them baptised in different churches, unless the Englishwoman is right when she said the family likely moved to another part of the city and the younger child had to be baptised in the parish church in the parish in which he was born, just as the older one likely was. At any rate, James, the older one, born June 1, 1689, departed this life in infancy (according to the National Biography, Vol. 42, page 43), while the younger, James Edward, born December 22, 1696, grew to be a man of wealth, power and influence; who gave of himself to his fellowman, winging his spirit to add to England's already great empire still another far-flung vision—Georgia, her youngest and most loyal!

Where Oglethorpe was christened. Top, St. Martin's-In-the-Fields church, Trafalgar square, London, where James Edward Oglethorpe was christened when he was one day old, the name James being the same as that which had been borne before his death by another son of his parents. Bottom, left, the crypt in this church where Oglethorpe was baptized. The king and queen of England worship in this church, the front row of the pews to the left of the aisle being set aside for their use, although the "regal seats" are in the balcony to the left of the altar. These seats are seldom used by the royal family because the minister can be seen only through windows. Right, Miss Willie O'Kelley, of the Georgia State College for Women, Milledgeville, who was sent to London by the Georgia bicentennial commission to unfathom the mystery surrounding the date of General Oglethorpe's birth.

Regulation of Motor Transport Is Urged By Georgia Editors

ATHENS, Ga., Jan. 28.—The Constitution editorial on "The Transportation Problem" has been the subject of wide and favorable comment on the part of Athens business leaders, an informal poll of whom reveals strong sentiment in favor of legislation looking to the preservation of highways and in the interest of safety of travel on public roads.

Editor Hugh Rowe, of the Athens Banner-Herald, calls for "legislation, with teeth in it, regulating and controlling the operation of the big trucks and heavy trailers now traversing the highways of this state."

In strong editorial comment Mr. Rowe declares that "these trucks and trailers have grown to be a menace not only to pedestrians, but especially to motorists," and asserts that "the greatest number of accidents occurring on the highways is chargeable to the big trucks that monopolize the right-of-way and force drivers of automobiles to take to the ditch."

"The time is ripe," continues the Banner-Herald, "and the condition is urgent for the enactment of legislation that will limit and control the privilege now enjoyed by this character of transportation."

SAFETY MEASURES NEEDED.

WAYCROSS, Ga., Jan. 28.—In an editorial captioned "Make the Highways Safe," the Waycross Journal-Herald expresses the hope that the Georgia Legislature "will pass legislation rigidly prescribing maximum sizes and weights for vehicles and compelling the use of adequate lights by all vehicles on the highways.

"The rapidly increasing death toll," says the editorial, "from accidents on the highways of Georgia has reached such alarming proportions that the best thought in the state is being centered on the formation of preventive measures."

TIME TO WAKE UP.

CORDELE, Ga., Jan. 28.—Under the heading, "Menace of Highways," the Cordele Dispatch, edited by Mrs. Charles E. Brown, declares that decidedly the worst menace of the highways are the oversized, heavy and unreasonable trucks.

"Once these get rigged up with their heavy loads, piled up just so high that not another thing could be added, then with a trailer swinging on behind like a snake, add to this a tired, sleepy driver who cannot hear the siren whistle or other noise-making device of the lighter cars and the death-dealing contraption is complete and ready for business. Is there any wonder that Uncle Sam is losing his thousands of citizens yearly not so much from bullets as from his own subjects who own these horrible menaces of the public highways?

"It is about time for the lawmakers to wake up, quit their filibustering, get down to work and enact some specific laws that will rectify this situation and not only make laws, but enforce them to correct this greatest of all enemies to the safety of our citizens—in the form of death and loss of property caused by horrible accidents caused by these menaces of the highways."

REGULATION A NECESSITY.

AMERICUS, Ga., Jan. 28.—"Regulation of motor trucks is a necessity," says an editorial in the Americus Times-Recorder, "and the sooner it becomes a reality throughout the country, the better it will be, not only for the public but for the truck operators as well.

"The main reason for limiting the gross weight is to protect our highways. Limitation of the height, width and length is done to eliminate much of the traffic hazard."

FAIR PLAY DEMANDED.
(From The Dalton Citizen.)

Between the two carrying industries, in justice to each, there should be more balanced legal requirements. Under present regulations in many of the states, of which Georgia is one, manifestly the railroads operate at a decided disadvantage. In addition to high assessments in taxation on their properties, both city, county and state, and the necessity they are under for maintaining roadbeds and equipment, in order to meet competition entirely relieved from such burdens they are forced to rate adjustments out of proportion to any reasonable return upon investment. These discriminatory requirements, if continued, can only bring inevitable destruction to our great railway system. In the interest of fair play a situation is thus presented demanding justice for the railroads at the hands of our lawmakers in preservation of their rights as taxpayers and "citizens wherever they serve."

PUT ON EQUAL FOOTING.
(From The Warm Springs (Ga.) Mirror.)

We cannot, without harmful effect, afford to neglect the railroad question much longer.

It is not absurd, however, for the railroads to ask the government to enact laws that will require their competitors to compete on an equal footing. And that is what the railroads are asking, and that is what they are justly entitled to receive.

WHAT THE RAILROADS PAY.
(From The Warrenton Clipper.)

On the valuation of the property of the railroads in Warren county, as shown by a comparative table in the same paper, they paid a total of $5,819.97, and the buses and trucks nothing. Of this amount $2,169.49 was for general county purposes; $2,260.19 was for Warren county school purposes; $305.54 went for city and town use; the remainder, or $1,084.75 going to the state. From truck and bus taxes neither of the above purposes received one cent of ad valorem taxes from collections as assessed for Warren county.

The statement is made that of the total of $3,893,313 in ad valorem taxes paid in Georgia by the railroads in 1931, a total of $809,000 was spent for the construction and maintenance of highways and bridges of Georgia—to be used by these competitors of the railroads who meanwhile were paying $9,727.11 as their total of ad valorem taxes.

It seems to us that here is a question that deserves the thought and immediate attention of our law-makers in Atlanta.

DAMAGE TO HIGHWAYS.
(In the Bartow Herald, Cartersville)

"One of the most pressing problems in the state is the regulation of commercial carriers using our public highways and the legislature should take steps to pass measures during the present session which will give a more equitable taxation for every carrier. If we continue to allow commercial motor transport to ply our tax-built highways, unregulated or half regulated, we will soon find that we have a system of through highways which have been worn out before their time by over-loaded carriers paying a tax below what should be required of them.

Our railroads are the greatest single industry we have in America and are among our heaviest taxpayers, yet while the railroads are paying heavy taxes for the upkeep of schools and other departments of government, public carriers are allowed to use our highways in unregulated competition and practically tax free. It is up to the legislature to determine an equitable taxation for every public carrier and to regulate them according to the same principles that other forms of transportation are already regulated.

Thinks Federal Crop Reports Are Invaluable To the Cotton Grower

Editor Constitution: In a recent editorial of December 15th, headed "Thhe Crop 'Estimates'," you favor abandoning the federal crop reporting service. You claim that it is not accurate and at many times causes the price of cotton to be lower than it should be. Suppose we did not have this service and the cotton farmers knew nothing at any time about the size of the crop? What would be our plight? Dealers in raw material and speculators, with practically unlimited funds, would have a representative in every community throughout the cotton belt and would know the probable production at all stages of the growing and maturing season. They could send forth the information that there was an indicated production of 16,000,000 bales when prospects actually pointed to only 10,000,000 bales, thereby depressing the market price heavily from what it should be. The producer, unorganized and scattered, would not know any better.

So far as accuracy of the report is concerned, let's take an average of five years and see how accurate they really are. From 1927 to 1931 the comparisons follow by months. In August the forecast was .4 of 1 per cent above final production; September 1.5 per cent below; October 1.1 per cent below; November .1 per cent below and in December .04 of 1 per cent below. I think the cotton farmer reporter has a right to pat himself on the back after making such estimates, knowing that they are more accurate than those made by any private agency.

Urges Increased Buying Of Georgia Farm Products

Editor Constitution: I read an article in your last Sunday issue written by Mr. K. E. Dean, of LaGrange. Mr. Dean draws attention to some of the problems faced by the Georgia truck and poultry producers. As a producer, I will say that Mr. Dean's remarks are based on facts, and I don't think too much can be said on this subject in order that the merchant and consumer may know what a serious problem we are up against.

In 1932 the markets were flooded with eggs and vegetables mostly shipped from other states. That condition created hundreds of competitors for our local merchants, for the farmer had to try to sell his produce on the street corners or go from house to house, and had to accept any price offered him. Now if our merchants would buy from their local producers they would overcome this competition and get all of this money back in trade.

Atlanta Servants, Trained, Lead Nation in Efficiency

Atlanta domestic servants are becoming known as the best trained housekeepers in the country, according to directors of the Community Employment Service Training school, said to be the only institution of its kind in America. While more than 2,000 graduates of the school have completed the course of training, until recently the general public was mostly unaware that such an organization existed here.

Operated since 1930, the school until recently was located at 200 Jackson street, N. E., from which location it has been moved to 955 Washington place, S. W. The institution is jointly financed by the Julius Rosenwald Foundation, the state vocational board, the Atlanta health department, the Atlanta board of education and the Community Employment Service.

Operating as the efficient institution it is, the school offers free training to servants and the course of study is extensive and comprehensive. Every duty about the home from the sidewalk to the garden in the rear yard is included in the course of instruction. A graduate of the school generally knows as much about homemaking as do graduates of college domestic science classes, the directors claim.

Popularity Has Grown.

Growing steadily in popularity, the school turns out more and more graduates each year. In 1930, 615 servants were trained and of that number 239 were placed in paying positions in Atlanta homes. In 1931 there were 929 students trained and 677 of them placed in jobs. Operating only six months of 1932 the school trained 593 students and placed 319 as domestics. Many of the servants attend the school while working at jobs.

The course of study is theoretical and practical. In the atmosphere of a modern home the students actually go through the work of caring for every detail from cellar to attic. A two-story house is occupied by the school with a classroom on the second floor and a layout of bedrooms, bath, living room, kitchen and pantry is on the first floor for demonstration purposes.

Lectures in Domestic Science.

At regular class hours the students assemble in the classrooms for lectures by domestic science experts, nurses from the health department and experts in various phases of homemaking. After the lectures they descend to the first floor, where practical demonstrations in the care of a home are given. Later the students actually go through all the duties servants are assigned in modern residences.

Instructors watch carefully and grade the students as they proceed with the work, and the grade cards are available for inspection by employers when the servants are placed in jobs.

In addition to the regular work of domestics, students are given a special course in child care. Such instruction is given twice each week under direction of a trained nurse.

Housekeeping Taught.

It is no "hit-and-miss" proposition in the school, and an outline is made for each job a servant may find in a home, beginning with a chart for cleaning a living room. Thus the servants are taught to proceed methodically and scientifically through the duties of keeping a house. The value of light and air, the menace of dust, the pleasing effects of correctly arranged draperies—all are taught.

Ordinarily a student is able to graduate within a few months after training is started, though the time depends largely upon the regularity of attendance. In many cases where students are already employed as servants they are unable to attend every class.

After graduation and placement the Community Employment Service keeps close check on the progress of the servants. Three months after placement the employer is queried regarding the efficiency of the domestic, and records so far show nearly 100 per cent favorable reports, according to school directors.

During the course of study the students are graded on punctuality, neatness, attitude and general deportment. The course of study provides for instruction in cooking all kinds of meats, breads, vegetables, soups, preparation of salads and dressings, arrangement of deserts and preparation of beverages.

Planning of Meals.

In addition, servants are taught the intricacies of meal planning, marketing and serving of meals. The course in cleaning includes care of the entire house, while detailed instruction in all angles of laundering and sewing is given. Instruction goes so far as to include gracious manners in answering the telephone and door bells.

The graduate servant of the community Employment Service Training school is also trained in the care of yards, flowers, hedges and grass cutting. They also receive instruction in driving, cleaning, repairing and greasing automobiles. Every type of domestic duties are included—for butlers, maids, cooks or general handy men and women.

The school is conducted under the supervision of Miss Irene E. Colwell, director of the Community Employment Service, and Jeanie Chaires, instructor and supervisor, who formerly was in the Atlanta school system.

Attempt To Glean Revenue From 'Beer Keg' Assailed

Editor's Note: This is another of a series of articles prepared with the committee on prohibition for the Atlanta Christian Council. An article along the same lines appears each Sunday exclusively in The Constitution.

A FOUNTAIN PEN OR AN EMPTY CISTERN?

"My people have committed two evils: they have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns—broken cisterns, that can hold no water."

A long time ago there lived a people who had highly developed the science of government and the arts of civilization. Their commerce commanded the markets of the world and the nations of the earth had respect for their political power and ethical influence.

Came a time, however, when all was not well in the internal affairs of this highly favored people. The exalted ideals and objectives, which had hitherto quickened their energies and incited their progress, had become obscured and were superceded by gross sensual indulgencies and apostacy to their high-born national aims. Followed fast the loss of prestige, national power and material wealth. Moreover, their councils were confused; their leaders, grappling desperately with national problems and disorders, sought in vain to re-establish order through devices conceived in confusion and promoted in wilful disregard for national righteousness and civic virtue.

True Diagnosis.

Looking back it is not difficult to see that their diagnosis of their trouble was no more accurate than their remedies were effective. The pity of it all is that they elected to grope in darkness and hasten to their doom when they might as well have walked with assurance in the light of the truth and continued the march to higher planes of national prosperity and achievement.

For there was a true diagnosis of their ills which they stubbornly ignored. The God of their fathers pronounced it in plain and unmistakable terms.

Their trouble was that they were relying no longer for national strength and security upon the tested and time-honored sources of power generously provided in the unerring wisdom of a benign providence but had sought in their own wisdom to follow the designs of their own creation, owning no allegiance save to the determinations of their own wills and the policies subservient to their own pleasure and profit.

In the attitude of that nation the great diagnostician found two things wrong—fatally wrong.

Two Things Wrong.

First: They had abandoned the "fountain of living water" in which alone national health and happiness cou'd be sustained.

Second: They had committed the folly of making for themselves cisterns—and broken cisterns at that—cisterns that simply wouldn't hold water—"cisterns that could hold no water."

Seems strange, doesn't it?

Surely with a fountain of living water, ample for every need, free and abundant, no sane people would want to experiment with making themselves some cisterns instead. And yet that is what they were doing.

Failure Predicted.

Well, there is a still greater wonder. With full knowledge of that disastrous experience in the history of an ancient people, with the finger of history pointing to the failure of nations from that day to this as they have sought to sustain and promote national life by drawing water from empty wells—another favored people are being asked today to pursue that same foolish and fateful course.

With no more promise of success in making cisterns that will hold water than the ancients had, are we to turn from the never-failing source of strength and security and embark upon an adventure which can have neither the warrant of experience nor the sanction of reason?

In an hour of national peril, deep anxiety and sore distress shall we turn, with happy dependence, to Him who has ever been our fountain of living water?

Or, shall we seek to deliver ourselves with some plan of our own—for instance, slake our thirst with narcotic liquors, provided under the law and with unstinted abundance?

"Glorify the Beer Keg?"

Shall we despise the deep satisfactions of soul refreshment, sound national health and the glory of a resplendent national service in the earth, and accept instead the dishonoring attempt to glorify the beer keg as the emblem of national ambition and the solvent of national problems?

Cruel as is the curse of liquor in its devastating ruthlessness, there is an even greater menace to national honor and national safety. This menace is that the supreme government of a traditionally Christian nation should profess its readiness to fill its treasury out of the shame and degradation of its citizens victimized through the agencies of their government. To accomplish this design is not only to violate honor and trample under foot the cherished principles of Christianity but frames the nation in the pathetic posture of abandoning its "fountain of living waters" to dip in man-made cisterns—"broken cisterns that can hold no water."

Such folly would mark a degree of stupidity and moral obliquity which must alarm every true patriot.

Incomplete War Records Injustice to Veterans

Editor Constitution: During the hurly-burly days of the World War, especially while the American soldiers were concentrated in France, many soldiers were wounded or contracted some disease. Owing to the unsystematic method of keeping records of these men while in France the records were lost. Many of the records were made out in such a hurry that they were defective and incomplete. Of course, the veterans will allow for some of this inefficiency in the incompleteness of their records during this conflict.

Where the complaint of the veteran arises is in the fact, that now, the government says that the Onus Probandi in establishing any claim for compensation rest entirely upon the veteran himself. The veteran assumes the responsibility of doing what the government failed to do during the war in keeping a complete record of these soldiers.

In many cases where a veteran cannot furnish the exact date, and the place, where the trouble first manifested itself, and prove beyond peradventure that his disability was contracted in the military service the claim is not given the proper consideration and is therefore disallowed. This is entirely no fault of the veterans and it is a phase of the laws governing veterans that should receive the earnest consideration of our congressmen.

If the veteran is totally incapacitated in any given case he should be allowed compensation or pension pari passu to his present incapacity to retain his former vocation.

Favors Shortening Of Working Periods

Editor Constitution: The establishing of a five-hour working day and a five-day working week as a temporary emergency measure as a trial for at least twelve months may be the means of restoring prosperity. I feel confident that the moment such a measure is legally adopted and rigidlly enforced will electrify the business world into an immediate response. Every wheel of industry throughout the land will start. There will be work for all. Almost immediately opening a tremendous home market. For every worker employed is a potential buyer. Thus, all commodities will gravitate to their true price levels.

The merchant and the farmer, the professional man and the manufacturer will lastingly profit with uninterrupted change through the adoption of the shorter working hours.

Happiness and prosperity will return to a now greatly depressed people.

The Happenings of the Church World

By Herman L. Turner, Pastor, Covenant Presbyterian Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Recently, the commissions of the Unitarian and Universalist churches released their report after a year of joint consideration of the "practicability of uniting these two communions for the common good." They reject both "the status quo" and "organic merger" and advise the formation of a representative "council" on the basis of "unity of purpose, the bond of highest religious fellowship." "Local churches would retain their present name, adding "Free Church of America." "The merger of local churches might or might not be wise." It is suggested that some 20 lines of effort be carried on in common, including church extension, education, publications and co-operation with the "International Association for Liberal Christianity."

The cry of hungry children in the coal fields, particularly in Kentucky and West Virginia and the southern Appalachian mountains, has brought about relief activities on the part of the American Friends Service committee (Quakers) on a larger scale than any they have understaken since their extensive relief werk carried on in Europe following the World War. James Myers, of the Federal Council of Churches, who has made repeated trips through the coal fields, says that in his judgment there is no other single area in the United States where greater suffering exists. "Some 200,000 men in the bituminous coal fields are totally removed from any chance of making a living. These men with their families constitute approximately half a million people who must be fed and clothed."

All the Presbyterian book stores supervised by the board of Christian education will have been transformed into sales agencies by March 1, 1933. This change will result in no diminution of service, but has been made to affect greater economy of operation, according to the publication department, Board of Christian Education, in Philadelphia.

The Y. M. C. A. began its work for Filipinos in the city of Manila and limited its activity to the metropolis during the first decade or more of its existence, according to the correspondent from the Philippines to the Christian Century. Now its program reaches into the provinces. Eight Filipinos and one American compose their provincial staff and are responsible for the association's activities in 12 provinces. Four of the Filipino secretaries are supported entirely by the districts where they work. The other four receive only part of their finances locally. Twenty high schools and 77 intermediate schools are reached by the Y. Government officials, both provincial and national, co-operate with the association in various ways. A few months ago the director of the bureau of commerce and industry visited 12 student centers and made 15 addresses to 13,000 young people. The provincial organization promotes education through debates and oratorical contests. During the last year 20,000 students attended these interprovincial forensic activities. Divorce, woman suffrage, taxation and the question of a national language furnished the propositions for debate.

Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, resident bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, at Washington, calls attention again to a conference of church leaders representing a number of denominations which will be held probably in Foundry church, Washington, D. C., on March 7 and 8, to consider the present temperance situation. The call is not issued at the instance of any single denomination, for eminent religious leaders of a number of churches have already indicated their purpose to urge a general and representative participation. "We do not contemplate any organization to displace any other group," says Bishop Hughes, "but we believe that the time has come when the reserves must be brought up to the line of battle and the churches must adequately assume their peculiar responsibilities in the matter. It is essential that our religious groups have a common understanding at this critical time for the temperance cause. We must make complete use of the entire organization of the Christian church courageously and effectively.

Dr. Alva W. Taylor, of Nashville, Tenn., gives this interesting item: Bishop Isaac Lane, founder of Lane College at Jackson, Tenn., recently celebrated his ninety-eighth birthday. He was born in slavery, learned to read looking over his master's shoulder and founded Lane 42 years ago on a capital of $500. Its assets are now $500,000 and his son is president.

The "Renovate Philadelphia Campaign" began January 3 when 6,000 volunteers undertook a house-to-house canvass through the whole city. The purpose was to secure pledges from property owners to have work done on their houses and places of business during the next six months. By the end of the week 5,000 home owners had agreed to make improvements which would give work valued at $2,320,850. Thus practically is Philadelphia endeavoring to help its jobless through the giving of jobs rather than charity alone.

The National Education Association has just completed a study of crime in its relation to education with results that are instructive, comments the Presbyterian Banner, especially in view of demands in some quarters that the costs of education be seriously retrenched. It costs $300 a year to keep a man in prison and less than $100 to keep a child in school. The total annual bill of the nation for dealing with crime in preventing and punishing it is $1,500,000,000, the total expenditure for education being $2,500,000,000. There are more than 25,000,000 children in the schools. Every time $2 is spent on elementary and secondary education $1.50 is spent to control crime. Since the great part of delinquency is due to maladjustment of the individual in school, home and community, the conclusions of the report suggest the lack of financial prudence exhibited by some local governments in subtracting from education and welfare budgets sums which will have to be added a short time later to the budget for the control of crime. While such juggling of the public account books may lull the fears of the taxpaying public for the moment, it can save no money and encourages the waste of the nation's human resources.

Commenting editorially upon the foreign mission situation, the Christian Standard declares that this is no time for panic. Christianity has never won true victories by compromising with paganism and it will not win them now.

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

EDITED by RALPH T. JONES

Wm. Powell and Joan Blondell In 'Lawyer Man' at Paramount

William Powell, at his best and teamed for the first time with Joan Blondell, is about the shortest way to sum up "Lawyer Man," fast moving comedy drama which opened at the Paramount yesterday for an exclusive run through Friday, after which it will never be seen in any other Atlanta theater.

It is possible the title might lead one to expect a heavy courtroom drama. Such, however, is not the case. Although there are many thrilling and poignant moments before the jury, the picture itself is more concerned with Powell's love affairs after—and during—office hours, than it is with his legal entanglements. He is plenty smart as a two-fisted fighting barrister, but he is woefully dumb when trying to cope with a woman's wiles.

Joan Blondell, with her big come-hither eyes and her wisecracking manner, is Powell's secretary, and she was an inspired choice.

As the east side lawyer who battles his way up to fame, William Powell is in the best performance of his sparkling career. Battering down all opposition until he mixes blondes with Blackstone, the picture gives free rein to Powell's dynamic personality.

The story deals with the young lawyer whose string of victories attracts the attention of a big attorney uptown and a partnership results. The sudden social change is too much and Powell goes "Park Avenue," despite the caustic attempts of his secretary to keep him down to earth. His existence on top of the world is brief, for a beautiful accomplice of a political ring, out to "get" Powell, betrays him, and the young lawyer finds the downward plunge much swifter than the upward climb.

Stripped of clientele, Powell is forced to became a shady, shyster lawyer with bootleggers, crooks and fallen women for his patrons. After regaining fame in this manner, he finds that he is working for the wrong goal, and spurns this fame for his east side people. And, of course, you have guessed that he finds his secretary is a swell girl, after being burnt by the uptown butterflies.

Smilin' Al Evans has one of the most novel programs of his entire career in his interpretation of "Technocracy." Another high spot on this program is a comedy entitled "Speaking of Operations." This is a fast-moving minstrel show, and is crammed full of laughs. Paramount News is, as usual, interesting.

'They Just Had To Get Married' Is Riot of Comedy at Fox Theater

The comedy scream, "They Just Had to Get Married," which opened at the Fox theater yesterday, is the first feature to be shown at that theater under the new contract between the Fox and Universal Picture Corporation.

"They Just Had To Get Married" is what is commonly known as a riot.

It's one of the funniest pictures of the season, and caused audiences Saturday to shriek with laughter. As reason for this, a glance at the cast of the picture is self-explanatory, for it includes so many well-known comedians who have starred in their own right on the stage and screen.

In the first place, there is Slim Summerville, Universal's premier comedian, co-starred with the well-known Zasu Pitts. Summerville's awkwardness is a perfect foil for Miss Pitts' lackadaisical nervousness, and as man and wife they are the center of a swift succession of hilarious situations.

Miss Pitts, always evoking gales of laughter, seems to have in her work a greater amount of studied seriousness, which, combined with the fluttering, waving motions of her hands, which never seem able to behave, proves irresistible.

In support of Zasu Pitts and Slim Summerville is Fifi D'Orsay, the piquant, graceful, big-eyed, black-haired girl—French to her fingertips.

Roland Young, C. Aubrey Smith, Henry Armetta and James Donlan, all well-known popular comedians, complete the cast.

In addition to the feature, "They Just Had To Get Married," the Fox is offering another of those well-known novelty musical short subjects which have gained such great audience popularity lately. Also, Jimmy Beers, console master of the mighty Fox organ, is presenting another of his increasingly popular organ solos, while a cartoon and the RKO Pathe News complete the bill.

Screen Offerings of the Week in Atlanta

'Whistling in the Dark' Chills And Amuses at Loew's Grand

Chills and comedy, expertly combined by one of the stage's most famous comedians, are provided a-plenty in "Whistling in the Dark," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film version of the famous stage success, with Ernest Truex, who scored one of his greatest dramatic hits in this stage production, appearing with Una Merkel, John Miljan, Johnny Hines and Nat Pendleton. The film is currently being shown at Loew's Grand theater.

Though Wally Porter (Ernest Truex) is a famous novelist, specializing in murder mysteries, he is actually a timorous, awkward fellow. His elopement, like most things he undertakes, threatens to go wrong when his automobile gets out of fix. With his fiancee (Una Merkel) he goes to a house nearby to telephone for aid. The house he enters is the headquarters of a notorious gang of crooks.

These gangsters are in hot water. A powerful enemy threatens to ruin their racket, and the only way they can prevent this disaster is to murder the enemy. But he is a prominent man, protected against their usual devices for removing a victim. Wally's appearance, and his identity, gives the gang chief an idea. If Wally can concoct such successful imaginary murders, why shouldn't he lay plans for a real one?

Wally and his fiancee are seized and commanded to lay out the scheme within 24 hours, or else. But Wally knows that, even if he does devise a successful scheme, he and his sweetheart will be murdered afterwards, to silence them against future communications with the police.

It's a tough spot for a timid writer. But Wally and his girl, Toby, finally think up a convincing scheme. They suggest that the gangsters put a deadly poison in the tooth paste of their would-be victim. How this suggestion is carried out, and how Wally communicates with the police, by connecting telephone wires with the radio, is shown in this clever combination of excitement and appealing comedy, with a famous stage comedian and a famous screen comedienne happily cast to provide a maximum of amusement for Loew's Grand patrons.

Georgia's 'Parachute Jumper' Is Good Picture Poorly Titled

An exceptional combination of star, director and author for the Warner Brothers picture, "Parachute Jumper," which is being offered at the Georgia all this week, is said to have resulted in a rare touch of humor, romance and thrills.

Alfred E. Green, who directed Douglas Fairbanks Jr. in that rollicking comedy, "It's Tough To Be Famous," and in "Union Depot," again handles the megaphone for the star in "Parachute Jumper." The two apparently work in perfect unison to get the maximum amount of laughs and thrills from a production.

The story is by Rian James, who wrote the satirically humorous screen play "Love Is a Racket," in which Fairbanks starred. Formerly a New York columnist, James wields a pen that is dipped in wit, wisecracks, repartee and satire, as evidenced in his screen play of "Crooner."

In "Parachute Jumper," and the title does not fit the story at all, there is the story of two former army flyers, who resign their commissions and then attempt to secure employment in civilian life. Here the fun starts thick and fast. Fairbanks is one of the former army men and Frank McHugh the other. Back in the big city they meet Bette Davis, Alabama is her nickname, and the three cast their lot together. There are several thrilling flying scenes but plenty of romance, snappy dialog and other interesting things dominate the picture. It is for this reason that theater advertising men are saying that "Parachute Jumper" is the world's worse title for a motion picture.

Others in the cast include Leo Carrillo, Claire Dodd, Shelia Terry, Harold Huber and Thomas E. Jackson.

Starting on Saturday, February 4, and running for one week, the Georgia will offer the sensational true story, "20,000 Years in Sing Sing," which was written by Warden Lawes, of Sing Sing. The story has appeared in book form and also as a serial in several magazines. A brilliant cast has been included in the picture, which carries the same title as the story.

"Tiger Shark" Opens Week at Empire

Monday and Tuesday the Empire theater presents "Tiger Shark," featuring Edward G. Robinson, Richard Arlen and Zita Johnson. This is a daring, tumultous drama of an amazing love tangle that only a terrible doom could solve. Two men and a wife and a villainous hate inspiring a horrible vengeance. One man flung overboard to the gaping maws of man-eating monsters, ferocious sharks at war with men in the most dangerous, daring colorful thriller ever filmed.

Two features head the bill Wednesday and Thursday. "Rock-A-Bye," featuring Constance Bennett, a story dealing with a woman who finds happiness in love for an adopted child, but whose life almost goes on the rocks through tongues of gossip and false accusations. This story gives Miss Bennett every opportunity for that emotional acting for which she is famous, expressing a wide range of human reactions. She is supported by two extremely capable and pleasing actors, Joel McCrea and Paul Lukas. "Wild Horse Mesa" is another Zane Grey story, in which you see men as untamed as the fierce stallions they seek to curb, a smashing dramatic romance of the west where justice speaks through a six-gun and love outrides the charging hooves of the wild herd.

"The Night of June 13," featuring Clive Brook and an all-star cast is the attraction for Friday. This is another mystery story full of actions and thrills.

Saturday Tim McCoy will thrill as a hard-riding, fast-shooting ranger in his latest western story, "Riding Tornado."

Buckhead Opens Week With 'The Last Flight'

"The Last Flight," featuring Richard Barthelmess, comes to the Buckhead theater Monday and Tuesday. The story deals with a young girl and four young men who were stranded in Paris after the war, and all feeling that life held nothing for them, decided to have a gay time. The finest part of the picture is the friendship between the four men. A competent cast includes David Manners, John Mack Brown, Helen Chandler and Walter Byron. Paramount News and a short subject, "Manhattan Medley," are added attractions.

Wednesday, Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey are funnier than ever in "Hold 'Em Jail," a hilarious comedy built around football and jails. Able support is furnished by Edna May Oliver and stuttering Roscoe Ates.

Paul Muni again demonstrates his ability as one of the most capable actors on the screen in "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang," to show Thursday and Friday. It is a tense drama of a dream shattered, a man sentenced to the chain gang. A large cast of capable players headed by Glenda Farrell, contribute excellent support. Selected short subjects balance the bill.

A return engagement of Harold Lloyd's delightful comedy, "Movie Crazy," will please audiences Saturday. The story is about a young man from a small town whose attempts to break into the movies are one complete succession of accidents, all of them humorous. Beautiful Constance Cummings is the shy Harold's first big, and timid, romance. Mickey Mouse and the ninth chapter of "The Hurricane Express" complete the program.

Coward Pleased With Reception Given New Play

By MARK BARRON.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28—(AP)—Noel Coward, who has definite opinions about audiences and he doesn't mind saying them, reports that he is extremely pleased with the reception given by the New York first night audience to his "Design for Living." When he arrived in this country several weeks ago to begin rehearsals with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in his new play, one of his first statements to the press was that the play absolutely would not be presented in Chicago. Coward was remembering the season when he appeared in "The Vortex" on tour.

"The Chicago audiences," he said, "nearly ran me insane. The more serious I became, the more they laughed."

One of his fears for "Design for Living" was that the audiences might have such a set conception of him as a comedy writer, that they would accept the serious passages of this play about "three people who love each other very much" as humor.

"But, the audience was marvelous," he said. "They got my meaning all through the play. They laughed only at the pure humor, and they were thoughtful about the passages I meant to be serious."

The play, a realization of a dream held for 11 years by Coward and the Lunts, was given 15 curtain calls by a first night audience.

Coward has written one of his best plays in "Design for Living," and although it does contain a generous share of his humorous bantering and parlor pranks, it is salted much with a sardonic, sophisticated and often bitter philosophy of life.

Gilda (Miss Fontanne), an interior decorator; Otto (Lunt), an artist, and Leo (Coward), a playwright, are the three principal characters. They are Bohemians of the spirit, casting off all the guide lines of respectable folk, deciding to strike out through life on their own.

Gilda is first the mistress of Otto,

Checking of reports in Variety, the Billboard and other theater publications shows that Eddie Cantor has been playing to capacity audiences at every performance since he and his company started on "the road." Which indicates, since Eddie is to play at the Fox theater here for two performances on February 8, that something over 9,000 people will enjoy his clowning on that date.

Failure of the distributors to get prints here in time prohibited previews of two important pictures this week. "Whistling in the Dark" at Loew's Grand and "Lawyer Man," at the Paramount. However, reports from other cities gathered via trade publications indicate that both are well worth anyone's time and money. The latter has a cast headed by William Powell and Joan Blondell. While the "Whistling" film boasts a famous stage comedian in the person of Ernest Truex with Una Merkel supplying the blond menace.

The Fox is certainly stepping out as a place for big stage and concert attractions. Eddie Cantor on February 8—Rudy Vallee on February 13—Paderewski on February 27—all in the flesh, too.

Are you going to try your hand at writing a picture title? Notice that Manager Earle Holden is offering $10—in conjunction with The Constitution—for a new title for "The Parachute Jumper." Certainly, having seen the picture, I can agree that it is woefully mis-titled. But it's a corking good film, nevertheless.

* * * *

The picture that Manager Murray is showing at the Rialto the first half of this week should start a lot of serious thinking about the fate of children whose parents travel the divorce court path to re-marriage. It is an M-G-M production and is splendidly made.

Diary of Pre-Viewer

TUESDAY—To the Georgia to see "The Parachute Jumper." A claver, snappy story of a couple of robust—in physique and conversation—aviators. Doug Fairbanks Jr. and Jimmy McHugh. Mustered out of the service they seek jobs. But first they find a girl, Bette Davis. And the jobs they find. Doug is, briefly, chauffeur to a woman who loses her chauffeur and meal ticket both because of her too rapid love-making. Then aerial liquor running enters the plot and it proceeds to get faster and snappier—rapidly. I liked the picture a lot, even if it has a wretched title. Title has practically nothing to do with the story, by the way. Young Fairbanks, always a favorite, improves as he adds a little flesh to his bones. But I wonder if that feminine hirer of chauffeurs is still in the market? Might try a little chauffeuring and its concomitant chores myself, if Doug will send on the address.

THURSDAY—"The Sign of the Cross." At the Paramount. They have been talking about this Cecil DeMille production for weeks. Until we were hungry to see it. Now, we can join in the chorus and classify it as a really magnificent film—all they said it was and more. A glorious two hours of entertainment, without argument and without qualification. I understand it is to be shown at the Paramount at the usual admission prices—which is a matter of sincere congratulation for all Atlantans. The story, you doubtless know, deals with Rome in the days of Nero, when Christians were slaughtered by lions and other wild creatures, human and animal, in the arena to make Roman holiday. Space forbids all I'd like to say about it, but there are four superb individual performances, in addition to the inspired direction of DeMille and the awe-inspiring spectacle of the entire film itself. Charles Laughton as Nero gives a performance that ranks as greater than anything any individual has done on the screen in four years, in my opinion. Claudette Colbert as Pompeia is only a shade less great and Fredric March as Marcus and Elissa Landi as Merci rival the other two. In

Story of Divorce Is Frankly Told In Rialto Film

A picture that frankly exposes one of America's greatest social problems is showing this week at the Rialto theater. It is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production "Divorce in the Family," and it deals, in startling fashion, with the terrible effect that divorce can have upon any children of the separated couple. It is a magnificently made picture, with Lewis Stone, Lois Wilson, Conrad Nagel and Jackie Cooper in the principal roles. It began its run at the Rialto on Saturday and will continue through Monday and Tuesday.

On Wednesday the Rialto will begin a three-day showing of "Tess of the Storm Country," one of the finest pictures ever made, with Janet Gaynor and Charles Ferrell in the leading parts. This picture was shown some time ago at one of Atlanta's present exclusive-run theaters, but the demand for an opportunity to see it at bargain prices was so great that Manager W. T. Murray, after pulling many wires, succeeded in securing it for his patrons.

The story of "Divorce in the Family" concerns an archaeologist, played by Lewis Stone; his wife (Lois Wilson), his two sons (Maurice Murphy and Jackie Cooper), and the wife's second husband (Conrad Nagel). The wife secures the divorce because her husband leaves her alone at home while he travels to far places of the earth on archaeological expeditions. At the time of the divorce the two boys are with their father in Egypt and when they return to America they find their mother remarried. The court awards the children to the mother and the tragedy and humor of the picture then centers on the inability of the sons—particularly the younger, Jackie Cooper—to accept their "new father."

When the older boy meets a high school girl and falls into the throes of adolescent love, the younger feels that his last friend has deserted him and he decides to run away from home. It is then that real tragedy lifts its head and for a time the picture seems to be drawing, inevitably, to an unhappy ending. But at the finish the understanding that has been denied before, awakes. The real father

"The Painted Woman" At Alamo Monday

One daring woman, who hated all men, brought face to face with the three men who wanted her, and forced to make a desperate choice. On this powerfully dramatic theme is founded the Fox picture, "The Painted Woman," which appears Monday at Alamo No. 2.

Dramatic Feature At DeKalb Monday

John Barrymore, Billie Burke, Katherine Hepburn, of Broadway fame, and David Manners appear in a strong dramatic picture at the DeKalb Monday. "Is My Face Red?" to be shown Tuesday, is an interesting story of the rise and fall of a noted columnist. Wednesday, the inside of the wrestling game is presented from the promoters' viewpoint in "Deception."

Thursday and Friday, James Cagney is at his best again in "Blonde Crazy." Joan Blondell and Guy Kibbee comprise the principals in his supporting cast. Buck Jones as "McKenna of the Mounted" is the feature for Saturday.

"Rockabye" To Start Week at 10th Street

Monday and Tuesday the Tenth Street theater opens the week with "Rockabye." Constance Bennett stars. "The Age of Consent," playing Wednesday, is a true-to-life campus story. The featured players are Richard Cromwell and Arline Judge. Every Wednesday night there will be presented an amateur contest on the stage.

Thursday brings "The Crooked Circle," a novel comedy-mystery concerning a group of amateur detectives. Friday's feature attraction is "Love Is a Racket," a fast-moving comedy-romance of a young Broadway columnist. Saturday, Lew Ayres will be seen in "Okay America," a dramatic story of a columnist who knows all the scandal and broadcasts it, regardless of anything or anybody.

NEWS OF STAGE AND SCREEN

Georgia Picture Titling Contest Ends Saturday

Have you ever complained about a motion picture because it had a title that was unsuitable? Of course you have, and many pictures have come from the movie capital in Hollywood, with the wrong title. Sometimes a bad title has been the means of keeping people away from a theater. For this reason the Georgia management was taking no chances with "Parachute Jumper." The title is being advertised as the world's worst for one of the most entertaining pictures brought to the Georgia in quite some time. What the man who wrote the title will think about this, the Georgia management does not care.

And so, in view of the fact that it has been admitted that "Parachute Jumper" is the wrong title for the picture, The Constitution and the Georgia theater is anxious to find a new title for this picture. A prize of $10 is being offered to any person in Atlanta who can write the best new title for the picture.

The rules governing this new title writing contest are very simple. The contest opened yesterday with the presentation of "Parachute Jumper" at the Georgia. Now all that is necessary is to witness a performance of this picture. Secure from the doorman at the theater an official entry blank, take this home with you, fill it out and either mail or leave it at the box office of the Georgia theater. The contest will close at noon next Saturday, any entry sent by mail and bearing a postmark up to and including that time will, of course, be accepted.

Dennis King in Comedy.

Dennis King, who was last seen on the stage in "Show Boat" and previously in "The Three Musketeers" and "The Vagabond King," has been signed for a special role in the Laurel and Hardy production, "Fra Diavola," which is not ready to start at the Hal Roach studios. The new comedy, in which Laurel and Hardy will don eighteenth century costumes, while King supplies the romantic arias, will be co-directed by James Parrott and Hal Roach.

PUBLIX RECEIVERSHIP OF NO EFFECT HERE

The Paramount and Georgia theaters, in Atlanta, and other southeastern theaters showing Paramount pictures, will not be affected by the receivership of the Paramount-Publix Corporation, R. B. Wilby, vice president of Valatenga Theaters, Inc., declared Friday morning.

Valatenga Theaters, Inc., is part of the commonly called "Publix-Wilby" group.

Mr. Wilby also said he was positive that two other organizations, Publix-Wilby Theaters, Inc., and Publix-Kincey Theaters, Inc., will not be affected.

"I see no reason why the receivership for Paramount-Publix will affect these groups," Mr. Wilby said. He pointed out that Publix or its subsidiaries own stock in the group, but added that he did not believe these southern organizations will be concerned.

Valatenga operates theaters in Nashville, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Bristol, Birmingham, Atlanta, Charlottesville, Newport News, and Lynchbulg, Va. Publix-Wilby houses are in Selma, Anniston, Auburn, Tuscaloosa and Montgomery, Ala., while Publix-Kincey operates in North Carolina at Greensboro, Charlotte, High Point, Durham, Raleigh, Salisbury, Winston-Salem, Hendersonville, Wilson and Chapel Hill. Theaters in South Carolina operated by this group are at Columbia, Spartanburg and Greenville.

Joan Bennett Stars In Picture at Poncey

"She Wanted a Millionaire," with Joan Bennett and Spencer Tracy, is the featured attraction at the Ponce de Leon theater Monday and Tuesday. This is a glamorous story of the life of a young girl who won a national beauty contest and married a millionaire. They went to Paris for their honeymoon and were encountered by a former lover of the beauty queen. The jealous husband shows his rage when he finds that his wife loves another and is killed when he tries to punish the girl.

Wednesday the feature picture is "The Woman in Room 13," with Elissa Landi, Ralph Bellamy and Neil Hamilton. A former husband tried to wreck the life of this beautiful young woman by spying on her. His detective work was not on the level and she was blamed for the murder of a man.

"Roar of the Dragon," with Richard Dix, Zasu Pitts and Arline Judge, is the offering for Thursday and Friday. A group of white people are trapped in the heart of Manchuria and seem at the mercy of a band of Chinese bandits.

"Night World," with Lew Ayres, Mae Clarke and Boris Karloff, is the thrilling picture offered Saturday. How would a young man feel if someone pushed a gun in his face and commanded him to stay away from his sweetheart? A story of night life in New York that is filled with the exploits of gangsters and gunmen.

visits his old home and there is a friendly reconcilation among them all. And the picture ends on a note of hope for peace and contentment and love for all the characters.

The love story of "Tess," which comes next Wednesday, is one famous to all lovers of the stage and of literature. But it has never been told more beautifully than in this Gaynor-Farrell picture produced by Fox. It is undoubtedly one of the most loveable features produced by Hollywood in years and it has caused more favorable talk than anything released in many months.

With clever short subjects, Manager Murray has two exceptional bills for the week.

Rights to Play.

Motion picture rights to the unproduced play, "The Harbor," written by Theodore Reeves, have been purchased by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. This story formerly bore the title, "Metropolitan Hospital."

Eddie Cantor and Company To Give Great Program Here

Eddie Cantor, heading a company of famous stage and radio stars, is coming to the Fox theater. The impish little clown who is the most popular comedian in American today, will be at the big theater at Peachtree and Ponce de Leon on Wednesday, February 8, for two performances, matinee and night. And it is a foregone conclusion that the theater, big as it is, will be filled to capacity. For there is no one today who can pack in the audiences like Cantor. He has proven that there is no such thing as a depression when the theater gives the public what it wants and he has likewise shown that, insofar as he is concerned at any rate, "the road" is just as profitable as it ever was.

It has been rare to find a vacant seat at any performance Cantor and his gang have given since they started their tour.

With Cantor will be, first of all, George Jessel, his "vice president of fun," who provides the perfect foil for the little man's humor. They appear together in numerous acts and skits on the program.

Music will be provided for the show by a famous jazz orchestra, Benny Meroff and his Versatile Orchestra. This outfit is one of the snappiest and fastest dance orchestras of the day. In addition to providing the necessary music for the Cantor show from the pit, they present a splendid act of their own from the stage.

Others in the company include the Four Abbottiers, dancers; Colletta Ryan, the girl prodigy; Holland and Knight, dancing stars; Bobby Bixley, the Legimaniast; Professor Sauerpuss and his Dogs Dolly Bell, etc. And the program shows that Cantor himself is on the stage eight times, in his own songs and patter, teaming with George Jessel, clowning with Colletta Ryan and in various skits of his own authorship.

It reads like a great show, irrespective of Cantor and, with him—it is the biggest thing theatrically that has come to Atlanta in a long, long time.

S. Russell Bridges, of the Southern Musical Bureau, sponsors of the attraction, announced Saturday that the advance ticket sale would open next Wednesday. The reserved seat coupons may be obtained either at the Fox box office or at the Cable Piano Company. Prices have been arranged thoroughly in accord with 1933 conditions, ranging from 50 cents to $1.50 for the matinee and 50 cents to $2.50 at night.

Mail orders will be filled in order of receipt if sent to the Southern Musical Bureau at 1221 Mortgage Guarantee building.

Rudy Vallee To Bring Orchestra To Fox for One Day, February 13

Unquestionably, the Fox theater, under local operation, is prepared to make February a gala month of entertainment for Atlanta amusement-seekers. Following close on the heels of its announcement last week that Eddie Cantor is to appear in person at the Fox on February 8, comes the announcement that another National Broadcasting Company radio star, Rudy Vallee, with his 15 Connecticut Yankees, is to appear in person at the Fox on Monday, February 13, under the auspices of the Yaarab temple oriental band. Vallee's appearance at the Fox will be the second in so many weeks of big name entertainers to come to Atlanta.

Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees are scheduled to perform on the stage at the Fox three times during their one-day showing in Atlanta, appearing at approximately the hours of 3, 6 and 9 that day, in conjunction with the regular screen program being shown that week.

Following the stage shows, Rudy and his orchestra are to play for a dance in the Shrine mosque ballroom, where accommodations have been extended to care for many times the usual capacity crowd.

Of great interest to Atlantans is the fact that Vallee has insisted that his performances be presented within the popular price limit thereby enabling everyone to see the big show.

Prices for that day are scaled at 50 and 75 cents and $1 for the matinees and 75 cents, $1 and $1.50 at night.

For that day, the regular Fox theater free list, including passes and thrift books, will be suspended, owing to the great cost of bringing so popular an entertainer to Atlanta, it has been announced.

FRIDAY—"They Just Had to Get Married." At the Fox. Slim Summerville and Zasu Pitts teamed again in a brand-new type of comedy. These comedy purveyors, who each have a style of their own, have been more fortunate this time in their story material than before. The play has some really bright ideas and it adds 100 per cent to its laughs by its theft of "spoken thoughts" trick that was used, seriously, in "Strange Interlude." The bedroom scene is excruciatingly funny and the only criticism is that it was, perhaps, too long drawn out.

SATURDAY—Saw "Divorce in the Family," at the Rialto, at 9 a. m. Found it more than worth getting out so early. An M-G-M production that handles, in a clever and heart-stirring story, the problems of the children of parents who are divorced. The mother marries again and the court awards her the children. But the two boys—sixteen and eight—worship their real father and resent the new one. There is a clash of personalities and a cleverly worked out climax that brings a satisfactory conclusion—at least, it is to be presumed that the future was happy for them all. Lewis Stone, Jackie Cooper, Conrad Nagel and Lois Wilson giving the fine performances always expected—with a young newcomer named Maurice Murphy exceptionally good as the 16-year-old brother. It's good entertainment and it provides something to think about after you leave the theater.

PLAY RECEPTION PLEASES COWARD

and then she moves on to Leo. She loves them both equally, and this wavering threatens to break up the strong friendship between Otto and Leo. But, they discover that none of the three can live without the other two.

Gilda flees from both of them, going off to marry a solemn art merchant in New York who lives according to popular conception of the code of a gentleman. Otto and Leo exile themselves on board a freighter sailing around the world, a voyage that later turns them up in New York as two rogues who are more mature but as cynical and impish as ever.

The play is an actor's circus, and it becomes a delightful, frivolous merry-go-round as performed by this trio.

On the Air Today

If there's any doubt that John Henry is a "natchal man" it will be dispelled when the legendary black river giant is recreated in the fifth and sixth episodes of Columbia's new artistic presentation, "John Henry—Black River Giant," to be heard over WGST and an extensive network from 7 to 7:15 and from 7:45 to 8 p. m. tonight. As he goes on down the line, John Henry buys himself a very elegant hat in which he takes great pride—as a "natchal man" should. But when it is shot off his head by some disrespectful gentlemen, his anger is aroused, and, gathering six of them in his arms he throws them into Black Snake swamp. The half-hour between the two episodes will be filled with a program of classical and popular music by Andre Kostelanetz's orchestra and chorus. Among the selections will be a southern medley and "Rhadsody in Blue."

An unusual organ program will have its inauguration over WGST this morning when Ancil Sweat and the Georgia theater organ take the air from 7 to 8:15 o'clock in a program of music. The program will be continued indefinitely with daily morning programs from 7 to 7:30 o'clock. Ancil Sweat has gained wide recognition as an organist, although he is only 18 years of age. His special arrangements of popular tunes have won for him a large radio audience.

Ernest Hutcheson, distinguished concert pianist and head of the Juilliard School of Music, will be the soloist on an All-Beethoven program to be broadcast over WGST and a nationwide Columbia network tonight from 9 to 9:30 o'clock. Accompanied by Howard Barlow and the Columbia Concert orchestra, Hutcheson will feature the famous Concerto in E flat, better known as the "Emperor" concerto. This composition, which was recently broadcast over the Columbia network by Josef Hofmann and the Philharmonic under Bruno Walter, is generally considered Beethoven's most powerful piano work. Composed in 1809 in Vienna when the French were occupying the city and Beethoven's own lodgings were exposed to firing, the concerto reflects none of the spiritual confusion and distress to which the composer was subject. The sonorous strains of the music mirror only strength and serenity and a quality of inspiration wholly aloof from external conditions.

Lotte Lehmann, noted star of the German and American concert and operatic stages, will be the soloist featured with Bruno Walter and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra in the broadcast over WGST and a nationwide Columbia network today from 2 to 4 p. m. The concert, to be broadcast direct from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, will include orchestral selections by Prokofieff and Tschaikovsky and arias from the works of Gluck and Weber.

Mme. Lehmann, who is the leading soprano of the Vienna Opera Company and is at present touring this country in concert performances, will be heard singing the aria, "Divinites du Styx" (Divinities of the Styx) from Gluck's "Alceste," and "Ocean Thou Mighty Monster," from Weber's "Oberon."

The morning period of the Church of the Air to be heard over the WGST-Columbia network from 9 to 9:30 o'clock today will be an Episcopal service. It will be conducted by Right Rev. Benjamin F. P. Ivins, D. D., bishop coadjutor of Milwaukee.

In the afternoon a Catholic period will be heard with Rev. Tom F. Conlon, national director of the Holy Name Society, as the speaker. Father Conlon will speak on "The Holy Name Society."

Andre Kostelanetz, musical conductor and director of his own musical revue presentation, will feature solo performances by Mary Eastman, soprano; Evan Evans, baritone, and Sam Prager, pianist, during the broadcast of the program tonight from 7:15 to 7:45 o'clock over the WGST-Columbia chain. Miss Eastman, accompanied by the large symphonic jazz orchestra, will offer the lovely aria, "Valse Huguette," from Friml's operetta, "The Vagabond King;" Evans and the orchestra will interpret a sturdy song by Flager, "Le Cor;" and Prager will contribute the piano accompaniment to the noted Gershwin work, "Rhapsody in Blue."

Manuel Quezon, president of the Philippine senate, will provide "A Philippine Viewpoint of the Independence Problem" in a radio broadcast from Manila to be relayed to this country over a coast-to-coast network of the Columbia Broadcasting System. The address will be heard between 10:45 and 11 a. m. today. For the second consecutive Sunday two international broadcasts appear on the Columbia network schedule within one hour. At 12:30 p. m., eastern standard time, on January 29, Sir Henry Strakosch, noted British banker and economist, will speak from London on "Why Is There Poverty in a World of Plenty?—Some Thoughts on World Depression and the Road to Recovery."

Selections from Mozart's Communion Service in B flat will be featured by Channon Collinge, distinguished conductor of religious music, when he presents another of the devotional Cathedral Hour broadcasts over WGST and a nationwide Columbia network today from 5:30 to 6 p. m. Soloists on the presentation will include Mildred Rose, soprano; Barbara Maurel, contralto; Theo Karle, tenor, and Crane Calder, bass.

Walter Smith, conductor of the concert band which broadcasts weekly from Boston, Mass., will offer a cornet solo, "Souvenir of Switzerland," by Liberati, as a highlight of the program to be heard over WGST and the Columbia chain today from 6:15 to 6:45 p. m. The selections to be played by the entire ensemble will include "Royal Decree," a march by the composer, English; selections from the Victor Herbert operetta, "Sweethearts;" Bellstedt's famous song, "Comin' Thru the Rye;" the overture to Gounod's opera, "Mirella;" and Fillmore's patriotic march, "Americans We."

James Morton, secretary of the Christian Council of Atlanta, announces the following speakers for the week beginning Monday, January 30, on the Christian Council program over WGST at 8:45 a. m. every week day: Monday—Rev. Nat G. Long, pastor, Peachtree Road Methodist; Tuesday—Dr. J. Blanton Falk, conducting special services at North Avenue Presbyterian; Wednesday—Rev. Hoke Shirley, pastor, Kirkwood Baptist; Thursday—Rev. W. M. Biggers, pastor, Underwood Memorial Methodist; Friday—Rev. W. L. Foley, pastor, East Point Presbyterian; Saturday—Rev. W. W. Memminger, rector, All Saints Episcopal.

The "Atlanta Arts Trio," made up of Geraldine Edgar Seidler, violinist; Priscilla Warren Loemker, 'cellist, and Isabel Mawha Bryan, pianist, will give the regular Federation of Georgia Music Clubs broadcast over WSB at 6 o'clock tonight, playing compositions of Shubert and Debussey.

The national committee for trade recovery will sponsor a radio program over WOR from 3:15 to 4 o'clock this afternoon on the general topic of "Public Works and Tacir Effect on Unemployment." Speakers will include Martin Dodge, banker; Stephen F. Voorhees, past president of the New York Building Congress, and Colonel John P. Hogan, chairman of the public works committee of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

CAR RANSACKED DAILY, OWNER TELLS POLICE

A postal card asking the police to tell thieves to stop ransacking his car every morning was received Saturday by Chief T. O. Sturdivant from W. E. Dunn Jr., 409 Park avenue, S. E., who lives next door to Mayor Key's chauffeur. The card, addressed to the chief, read:

"For the past three mornings I found my car with the doors opened, with the seats up and ransacked. If you could tell these thieves they are not going to find anything in my car, would appreciate it. We had nothing of this kind for a week after the mayor's car was robbed (of a 'How Dry I Am' horn) next door to my home but they are back at it again." The chief ordered special protection for Mr. Dunn.

Nation's Best Show Ring Horses Will Be Seen in Miami Feb. 15

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 28.—The pick of the nation's show ring horses, turned out since the last big judging event of 1932, soon will be under saddle and in harness again for the 1933 circuit, which will have a brilliant opening in Florida this year in the Miami Biltmore national horse show. The meeting will be staged at the Tropical Park race track February 15-18, and is sponsored by the Florida Year-Round Club, of which Colonel Henry L. Doherty is president.

The newcomer to Miami's winter sports parade has the backing of nationally known sportsmen, industrialists, and men of affairs. Colonel Doherty, New York scientist and inventor, is president, and Harvey S. Firestone, rubber magnate, and Robert Law, New York financier, are vice presidents of the Miami Biltmore nations' show.

Exhibitors are welcoming this southern debut, not only for the total of $15,000 prize money, with no less than seven $1,000 stakes, but because the balmy Florida atmosphere will round the blue-ribbon challengers into top shape. Thirty-five miles of sodded bridle paths and a complete hunting course are available at the Biltmore Club for the finishing touches in schooling for the 1933 skirmishes.

Honors have been posted for all types of horses—both three-gaited and five-gaited saddle horses, harness horses, roadsters, harness ponies, hunters, jumpers, military mounts and polo ponies. Each class pays $130.

PROGRAM ANNOUNCED BY CANADIAN PACIFIC

MONTREAL, Jan. 28.—A note of optimism for the summer of 1933 is struck in the Canadian Pacific's announcement of its plans for the summer season. In the trans-Atlantic traffic, an average of two sailings a week in both directions is set by the total of 59 departures from each side of the Atlantic during the 7 1-2 months from April 15 to November 30.

The St. Lawrence route to Europe will be opened this year by the Canadian Pacific liner Montrose, which, leaving Liverpool April 7, is scheduled to arrive in Montreal April 15. The Empress of Britain, now cruising around the world, is scheduled for her heaviest summer season since she entered the service, and will make 13 voyages in each direction. With her on the Quebec-Cherbourg-Southampton service will be the Empress of Australia for three voyages in each direction.

The four Duchesses, the Montrose and Montcaro, will maintain a frequent service between Montreal-Quebec and Glasgow, Belfast and Liverpool. Starting with the Montclare from Montreal April 21, 34 voyages in each direction make a better than once a week average in the Liverpool service alone, although many of the vessels in this service will also take part in an extensive cruise schedule.

New Methods of Construction in This Modest House

In this house the cost was kept below $10,000, although high standards were set in the excellence of its architecture, the materials of standard brands, and the complete and modern equipment. Leland Hubbell is the architect. The colonial entrance porch is pictured left above, the bathroom right, the mantel below at center. The house has six rooms and is colonial in spirit. The exterior is shown above, center, while the floor plans are shown left and right below. These plans are certified by the Good Housekeeping studio of architecture and furnishings.

JANUARY BUILDING SHOWS AN INCREASE

Contracts awarded for new construction in the 37 states east of the Rocky mountains during the period from January 1 through January 15, 1933, totaled $43,261,300, according to F. W. Dodge Corporation. During the corresponding period of 1932 a total of $37,312,000 was reported.

The December construction contract total aggregated $81,219,300; this contrasts with a volume of $105,302,300 for November, and a total of $136,851,600 for December, 1931. Losses from both November, 1932, and December, 1931, were shown for each of the four major construction classes except public utilities which showed an advance between November and December, 1932, due chiefly to larger undertakings by railroads. In December gains were scored over November, 1932, and December, 1931, for factories, chiefly because of modernization work, and educational buildings while an increase between November and December was also shown for hospitals and institutions but these gains were too small to counteract important losses in the remaining principal classes of non-residential buildings.

Residential awards in December showed a decline of about 32 per cent from the November total, and were only one-third as large in the aggregate, as those reported for December, 1931. Contracts let in December for public works totaled $36,866,200 as against $50,095,900 for November and $39,508,400 for December, 1931. It is of interest to note that awards for highways, though smaller than in November were larger than in December, 1931, and that contracts for new bridges showed practically no decline from the award total of December, 1931.

For the full year 1932 contracts for all classes of construction totaled $1,351,158,700 as against $3,092,849,500 for 1931. Losses were general for each of the four major construction classes. Non-residential building suffered a decline of almost 57 per cent from the 1931 contract total; residential building declined almost 66 per cent; public works suffered a loss of 41 per cent; while public utilities awards decreased almost 75 per cent cent.

In the case of non-residential building losses from 1931 were suffered in all principal types, commercial buildings and factories sustained the most significant declines while public and semi-public building, embracing educational structures, hospitals and institutions, religious and memorial, and social and recreational facilities also recorded sizable losses from 1931.

In the case of residential building, apartments and hotels suffered relatively larger declines from 1931 than did 1 and 2-family houses.

Holtsinger System Auctions Big Farms

Successful auction sales of two large farm subdivisions were announced on Saturday by the Holtsinger Auction Sales System in the Mortgage Guarantee building.

One of the sales involved 1,000 acres at Warm Springs owned by the Atlanta Joint Stock Land bank, and the other 1,300 acres owned by the Williams Lumber Company of Atlanta at Buena Vista. Every acre of the two tracts was sold.

On next Tuesday the company will auction 1,300 acres subdivided into small tracts for the J. W. Starr & Lumber Co., of Atlanta, located at Warm Springs.

Colonel F. M. Holtsinger, founder and owner of the Holtsinger Auction Sales System, announced that H. H. Pierce, well-known auction expert, is managing the real estate division of the company. In addition there is a trained crew of auctioneers and salesmen, Colonel Holtsinger added.

New Leases Made In Peachtree Arcade

Three new leases in the Peachtree Arcade building were announced on Saturday by G. M. Archibald, lease manager for the R. R. Otis Company, rental agents of the building.

John W. Walton and J. A. Campbell, court commissioners, took Rooms 406-8. Other leases were to P. J. Stillwell, 341, who handles Process Company greeting cards and is agent for Puro Deodorant, and W. O. Steele, men's furnishings, who took the ground floor store at 151.

F. A. York, agent for the Rose Exterminating Company, renewed his lease on No. 7.

Historic Spots on Marietta St. To Have Timely Interest Soon

With the official opening of Georgia's bicentennial celebration just two weeks off, interest has quickened in the historical points throughout Georgia and Atlanta. Commenting on this fact, James D. Robinson, president of the Central Marietta Street Association, yesterday called attention to the many landmarks of national importance that are to be found on Marietta street, many of them in what is now one of the chief business sections of the city.

"Older residents," said Mr. Robinson, "will recall that the state capitol building was formerly on the southwest corner of Marietta and Forsyth streets, the present site of the Western Union building. The new capitol was built in 1889. The legislature was in session on Marietta street when news of Grover Cleveland's election, the first democratic candidate to attain the presidency after the Civil War, reached Atlanta. Henry Grady, then editor of The Atlanta Constitution, first received the news and rushed to the legislature, shouting, 'In the name of the state of Georgia and of Grover Cleveland, president-elect of the United States, I declare this meeting adjourned.' On this same corner, in front of the building where he announced his momentous news, stands the monument to Henry Grady, Georgia's great statesman, editor and orator."

On the southeast corner of Marietta and Forsyth streets, in the Ivan Allen-Marshall building, is located Woodrow Wilson's first law office. The location is appropriately marked by a bronze plaque placed on the building several years ago by the Central Marietta Street Association. The office was occupied by Wilson from the summer of 1882 until the fall of 1883, when he gave up law practice to pursue his studies at Johns Hopkins University.

First National Bank.

Farther up Marietta Street was located for a time the first national bank in the state of Georgia and the oldest national bank in the cotton states. Founded in 1865 the Atlanta National bank was opened in the home of General Alfred Austell on the present site of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, pending the completion of its offices on Alabama street. The old Atlanta National was one of the predecessors of the present First National Bank of Atlanta.

Marietta street was the scene of several of the important events of the Civil War. At the Julian Oglesby residence, 1256 Marietta street, stands a monument on the site of the headquarters of General Joseph E. Johnston at the time he was succeeded in command of the Confederate army by General Hood. The date was July 17, 1864. Across the railroad from this monument is the "House of Three Flags," the Huff house. Built in 1855 it was not destroyed during the siege of 1864 because it was flying a British flag.

At the corner of what is now Marietta street and Howell Mill road, Atlanta was surrendered to the federal army in the fall of 1864. James M. Calhoun, mayor, and a delegation of Atlanta citizens, met the federal troops and made the formal surrender to Colonel John Coburn, of Indianapolis.

History of Business.

"History in Atlanta has been made in other ways than by wars," Mr. Robinson commented. "Some of Atlanta's oldest business concerns, located here on Marietta street, have done much toward the advancement of this city and state, of which the community may well be proud as the state celebrates its 200th birthday. The John Silvey Company, located at Marietta and Spring streets, is 82 years old. The Western Union Company has had offices in Atlanta for 79 years . . . since 1854.

"The First National Bank of Atlanta is 68 years old this year and Beck & Gregg Hardware Company is 67, the latter with a record of being on Marietta street for 34 years. Jacobs' pharmacy, 49 years old, has been on Marietta street for all but a few years of its history. Verner's, Atlanta's oldest restaurant, is on the street and there are numberless other concerns with impressive records of service that could be mentioned.

It is thought that the first realty transaction to be made in what is now Atlanta embraced the Marietta street section. The tract, about 202 1-2 acres, was bounded on two sides by the present Peachtree and Simpson streets, running about to the railroads on the south and a little past Spring street on the west. In 1825 the tract was granted to Mrs. Jane Doss, a widow. Six months later she sold it for the sum of $50!

Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra To Give Concert Here Friday Night

The Minneapolis Symphony orchestra, under the direction of their illustrious conductor, Eugene Ormandy, returns to Atlanta Friday for a double bill of concerts in Wesley Memorial auditorium, a matinee concert at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and an evening concert at 8:30 o'clock. The orchestra is brought back to Atlanta by the Atlanta Music Club and Civic Music Association, Mrs. Howard Claude Smith Jr., president, because of the popular demand for their return following their tremendous success here last season. Ormandy is a magnetic wizard of the baton, and has an inconceivable way of handling his orchestra to the man to produce nothing less than thrilling symphonic results.

The matinee concert, a special feature of the season and an added attraction made possible so that the school children of Atlanta may attend, will present a fascinating program that holds wide appeal to both children and grown-ups. Wagner's March from "Tannhauser," the first movement of the immortal "Fifth Symphony" of Beethoven, Tschaikowsky's "Waltz of the Flowers" from the "Nutcracker Suite" are among a number of other things to be found on the program that the youngsters will particularly enjoy. Already a number of reservations have been made by groups of students from neighboring cities, and over 2,200 of Atlanta's school children are expected to be in attendance.

Admission for children to the matinee will be 25 cents, for college students 50 cents, and for adults $1. An adult bringing 10 children will be admitted free. Membership cards will not admit holders to the afternoon concert, this being an extra feature. Tickets will be on sale on the first floor of Rich's, Inc., and at Cable Piano Company from Monday through Friday noon.

Only members of the Atlanta Music Club will be admitted to the evening concert, this being one of the regular concerts of the artist series. Tickets for the evening concert will only be sold to out-of-town people.

Recognized for many years as one of the leading symphonic ensembles, the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra is the first great organization of its kind in the world to be directly affiliated with a great university. Under an affiliation initiated by its manager, Mrs. Carlyle Scott, the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra moved into its new home in beautiful Cyrus Northrop Memorial auditorium at the University of Minnesota. There the university has given it a large rehearsal hall, instrument room, business offices, and library for its $100,000 collection of scores. In the auditorium, seating 4,800, it now plays its Twin Cities seasons of symphony, popular and young people's concerts to capacity houses.

Churches To Intervene In Ruth Judd's Behalf

February 17 had been set as the execution date by the state supreme court. Governor B. B. Moeur today signed the respite.

Phoenix clergymen, fearing the execution was set for Good Friday, said they planned to appear at the meeting March 6 of the board of pardons and paroles, both to ask leniency for Mrs. Judd and, should that appeal fail, to request that the date of execution be changed.

Seiberling Dealers Attend Club Dinner

Officials, staff and associate dealers of the Brooks-Shatterly Company, Seiberling tire distributors, attended a get-together dinner at the Elks' Club last Monday evening. E. C. Shatterly, president, presided, and talks were given by W. P. Melton, southeastern branch manager of the Seiberling Rubber Company, and Ulric C. Jones, local advertising counsel. H. H. Brooks, secretary and treasurer, presented the company's plans for 1933. Similar meetings are planned monthly by the Brooks-Shatterly Company. Guy Henderson, proprietor of the West End Tire & Battery Company, also spoke. In the photograph above, reading from left to right: First row, Ulric C. Jones, H. H. Brooks, E. C. Shatterly, W. M. Mulkey; second row, F. C. Thomas, L. E. Williams, H. E. Wallace, Carlton White, Walter L. Pattillo, P. J. Reidelberger, E. A. McAloon, C. S. Mitchell, John Ball, H. A. TECHNOCRACY TOPIC OF DR. CAULEY'S TALK Technocracy, a widely discussed subject today, will be the theme of an informal talk to be given in Rich's bookshop by Dr. T. J. Cauley next Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

Everyone interested is most cordially invited to attend.

Technocracy is attracting the attention of eminent thinkers throughout the country, who are expressing their opinions and discussing various phases of the subject through numerous newspaper and magazine articles, as well as books. It is because of the many inquiries regarding technocracy that Rich's bookshop has arranged this lecture.

Dr. Cauley, who is associate professor of economics at Emory University, has given considerable thought and study to the subject. Holding degrees of B. A. and M. A. from the University of Texas and a Ph. D. from the University of Wisconsin, he taught economics at several prominent universities before coming to Emory nearly two years ago. He will take a leading part in Emory's "Institute of Citizenship" in the spring, talking on technocracy at that time.

Those who want to know what technocracy is, as well as those who want to know more about it, will find the informal talk Friday afternoon of great interest. There is no admission charge.

MRS. ASHBY WRITES OF TRAVEL THRILLS ON WORLD CRUISE

Beauties of an airplane flight from Balboa to Cristobal and back, the quaint scenes of the Canal Zone and the attitude of a native "that America should not attempt to collect war debts," were described in a letter received in Atlanta last week from Mrs. Rose Mae Ashby, world traveler and lecturer, who now is on a trip around the world through the southern hemisphere.

Mrs. Rose Mae Ashby, world traveler and lecturer, now on a tour through the southern hemisphere, in a Bedouniese costume in Tiberius while in the Holy Land on a world tour. She has toured the world twice in the northern hemisphere.

Mrs. Ashby sailed from New York aboard the Carinthia to visit the West Indies, Panama Canal Zone, California, the Hawaiian Islands, the South Sea Islands, New Guinea, New Zealand, Australia, Java, Singapore, Jahore, Ceylon, Africa, several South American countries and the Barbadoes.

Describing Jamaica as "unsurpassed in scenery in the tropics," Mrs. Ashby quoted a Jamaican she conversed with at Kingston. He said: "The United States is to be blamed for the world depression. War debts should be cancelled or suspended for 10 years because other nations are not financially able to pay debts and at the same time purchase commodities from America."

Mrs. Ashby also described a trip by steamer from Cristobal to Balboa. She said a majority of the people on the cruise were old world travelers. They reached San Pedro, Cal., Saturday, and will sail today for Hawaiia, from which point Mrs. Ashby will continue her itinerary. Previously she had twice gone around the world in the northern hemisphere.

VICKS EXPLAINS PLAN TO HELP BUSINESS

GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 28.—The House of Vicks—famous for its various household preparations and plan for better control-of-colds—has its own way of overcoming depression, according to the company's announcement. Instead of retrenching, it expands. It employs more people—spends more on its research division in developing new products; more money for advertising them. This, in turn, requires the purchase of more raw materials, and helps other business in allied lines, it was explained. Continuing, the company said:

"Just lately Vicks introduced a new product—Vicks Voratone Antiseptic. In its production, and in preparation for its marketing, thousands of people were given new or extra employment. Three weeks ago 132 carloads of this new mouthwash and gargle went out through wholesale druggists to America's 60,000 drug stores. In each carload there was an added slice of prosperity for bottle makers, cap manufacturers, carton makers, glass and paper mills, printers and engravers—to say nothing of the various sources of raw materials for the product itself; and the thousands for whom pay envelopes were created or fattened.

"Nor does all this take into account the $700,000 appropriated for the Vicks Antiseptic introductory advertising campaign—over 85 per cent of which is being spent in newspaper space. It's Vicks answer to the challenge of the times—'Can new business be created in a period of depression?'

"Vicks believes that it can be done. In fact, is proving it. There has been an amazing public response to the announcement of this new product—of which there were 5,000,000 trial bottles made available to druggists below cost of manufacture, to make it easy for the public to test and prove its quality—and economy. Born in a depression year, Vicks Antiseptic has been priced in keeping with the times."

TRADE DRIVE IS URGED FOR INAUGURAL DAY

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 28.—(UP)—A program under which merchants, manufacturers and the buying public would "make a concerted attack on the depression" on inauguration day, March 4, has been submitted to the National Retail Dry Goods Association by Channing E. Sweitzer, managing director, it was revealed here today.

Restocking of slim inventories by retail stores at the beginning of the spring season and the holding of "sales" to stimulate buying is proposed in the plan, heralded as a move to "lend powerful support to the Roosevelt regime at the very moment of its birth."

"Roosevelt Day," as March 4 would be called, would mark the beginning of a continued, intensive campaign for the stimulation of business, sponsors suggested.

Sweitzer's memorandum states in part that "increases in orders on a nationwide scale, however small they might be individually, would create a stimulus to production and employment unprecedented in the long depression." These increases, it says, coming at this time, "may well be the signal for the turn that is so eagerly awaited."

"Prosperity drives, so-called, have been started in individual communities with varying results, but nothing has been undertaken on anything like the scope of 'Roosevelt Day,' and surely no co-operative effort has had such tremendous factors in its favor.

"Completely successful, the stimulus to employment would be enormous. Even moderately successful, the result in increased activity would be a godsend to the world of trade. This should not be considered a mere selfish move on the part of retailing interests, but rather as the act of patriotic businessmen, backing up America and its government, the part of retailers in starting the ball of recovery rolling."

POLICY LOANS LESS, LIFE REPORT SHOWS

A steady decrease since June in demands for policy loans, with November borrowings the lowest of any month in the last two and a half years, is revealed in the eighty-ninth annual report of the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, made public this week.

"As this is also the experience of many other companies," President George Willard Smith says, "it would seem to indicate an improvement in general conditions."

Pointing out that requests for policy loans in the last three years have been more than double the normal due to the business depression, the report states that within the last year New England Mutual policyholders have repaid more than $2,000,000, a larger sum than in any previous year. In the same period policyholders established a new high record by leaving over $842,000 of dividends with the company on deposit, besides $1,000,000 in dividends applied to buy additional paid-up insurance.

Gross surplus before dividend allotments for the year 1933 was $30,673,420. Net surplus after the deduction of dividends voted was $16,323,420, which, with $3,000,000 set aside as an investment fluctuation fund, exceeded the total of a year ago.

The report pointed out that since 1899 the annual dividend to each policyholder has been higher than that paid him the year before and that, despite general economic conditions, $11,350,000 has been voted for dividend distribution in 1933, continuing their regular scale without reduction

Payments to policyholders and beneficiaries, exclusive of dividends, totaled $28,158,768, nearly $6,000,000 more than in 1931, but, notwithstanding terminations of policies, the amount of insurance in force was only 2.14 per cent less than at the beginning of the year.

Total premium income was larger than in any previous year, due in part to the company's entry into the annuity field last year, but, excluding annuity premiums, premium income was only 2 per cent less than in 1931.

Given Atlanta Term.

CLARKSDALE, Miss., Jan. 28.—(AP)—George Len Box, 32, Rosedale, federal prisoner who officers said attempted suicide by jamming a jagged mop handle down his throat following his arrest, was given a year's sentence in Atlanta prison by Judge Allen Cox in federal court here on a charge of violating the national liquor law.

SENATE ECONOMY DEMAND GROWING

King, of Utah, Adds Voice to Balanced Budget by Slashes.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Dissatisfied with the latest and more lenient democratic proposal to slash appropriations as far as possible, without setting a definite figure, Senator King, democrat, Utah, said tonight the "democrats haven't the courage" to go through with a "real" economy program.

The economy controversy will be reached by the senate again next week when Senator Tydings, democrat, Maryland, asks a vote on his resolution to instruct the appropriations committee to reduce all supply bills as far as practicable without impairing any essential federal functions.

This proposal was agreed upon by a democratic conference yesterday after it discarded as "impracticable" a more drastic resolution of the Marylander calling for a cut of approximately half a billion dollars in appropriations.

A plan for lopping $800,000,000 off federal expenditures was submitted to heads of the congressional appropriations committees today by spokesmen for the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Henry I. Harriman, president; Matthew S. Sloan, vice president, and Redfield Proctor, a director, called on Chairman Byrns, of the house committee, and Senator Hale, leader of the senate committee.

"Demands reaching the chamber from the business interests of the country that the 1934 budget be balanced by reducing government expenses are becoming more insistent," Harriman said.

The chamber plan would take $400,000,000 out of veterans' expenditures, $50,000,000 out of non-recurring items, $250,000,000 out of construction expenditures and 170,000,000 out of general departmental costs.

Sloan said these reductions "would make a total cut of $870,000,000, which would allow for $66,000,000 increase in public debt charges." The veterans' cut, he said, would not disturb Civil War pensions nor cut a "single penny of the payments to those who incurred any war service disability or their dependents."

King was inclined to agree with republican Senator Smoot's observation that the democrats were "marching up the hill and marching down again."

He told newspapermen appropriations could be slashed by $750,000,000 without crippling any essential agency and reiterated a man of "courage" was needed in the White House—one who would slash federal expenditures even if it cost him another term—and he believed Franklin D. Roosevelt has such courage.

When the senate resumes consideration of the billion-dollar treasury-postoffice bill Monday, Senator McKellar, democrat, Tennessee, is prepared to press amendments reducing it by about $40,000,000.

The amendments would cut in half the $50,000,000 lump sum for public building construction and reduce ocean mail contract funds by $7,250,000 and the air mail allotment by $9,500,000.

Harriman told the committee leaders:

"It is my deliberate judgment that if congress will give definite assurance that the nation's financial house will be put in order the people will respond at once with forward commitments of their income, their savings and their credit.

"This would accelerate buying, turn the wheels of industry at a quicker pace and greatly relieve the unemployment situation."

Byrns told the delegation that the budget already had cut $500,000,000 off current appropriations and the house had added $70,000,000 more on supply bills passed to date.

"I am just as much interested in reductions as anybody else and think splendid progress is being made," Byrns said. "But some of these appropriations are made necessary by law and can't be cut by this committee until the law is changed. We appropriate, we do not legislate."

In connection with the proposed veterans' cut, Byrns told the visitors that benefits were fixed by law and could be changed only after new legislation which would have to be handled by a legislative committee.

"They agreed with me that this matter should be handled by a legislative committee," Byrns said, "when I pointed out this committee has neither the time nor the authority to investigate such matters.

"A joint congressional committee has been occupied with a veterans' investigation for six months and hasn't reported yet. It is only through such a committee authorized to legislate that these laws can be changed."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Lame-duck representatives and their politically more fortunate colleagues will have a chance to vote shortly on how much the government should pay members of the next congress.

When the legislative appropriation bill comes up—and it is next in line after the independent offices supply measures—Representative Whittington, democrat, Mississippi, plans to offer an amendment making salaries in the next fiscal year $7,500.

Just now, the law fixes salaries for both senators and representatives at $10,000. But under last year's economy act they were cut 10 per cent to $9,000 and this provision was renewed by the house in the treasury-postoffice supply bill now before the senate.

Whittington plans to seek a further cut to $7,500 when the legislative appropriations bill comes along.

Jaycee Head, Other Leaders Indorse 'Let's Go, Atlanta'

Duncan J. Peek, president of the Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce, is seen with a streamer showing the slogan of the campaign, "Let's Go, Atlanta."

"Everybody expects a definite improvement in business when the new administration goes in at Washington," Duncan Peek, president of the Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce, said on Saturday. "My feeling is that we need not wait even for that short time. I am heartily in favor of this 'Let's Go, Atlanta' movement."

Other leaders of local civic enterprises voiced a similar indorsement of the plan.

"Many of our members in the Junior Chamber are junior executives, and keep in close contact with business trends," Mr. Peek continued. "These think that the time has come to encourage optimism, to abandon the cynical viewpoint so many have taken in the past year or two.

"This would not be false optimism. I have talked the matter over with leaders in various lines, business and professional. They tell me that business has increased decidedly in January. We must chime in with this improved sentiment, encourage it and carry it along.

"Let's Go, Atlanta," Is Spreading.

"I was impressed with Shelby Myrick's speech before the retail merchants of Atlanta last week. He said that the state looked to Atlanta for leadership now as never before. He told the merchants that we were surfeited with pessimism, that the general attitude was driving money into hiding places. What we need, he suggested, is a spirit of enthusiasm in our business outlook. The public must be encouraged to patronize industry."

Mr. Peek's organization is composed of young men who are winning their spurs in business and professional life in Atlanta. He himself is assistant secretary of C. A. Rauschenberg, Inc. In this position he comes in daily contact with various elements of activity in Atlanta.

"Our members are already talking 'Let's Go, Atlanta.' We in the Junior Chamber of Commerce believe that it is a constructive move with great possibilities," Mr. Peek declared.

Mr. Peek is not alone in his optimism. In this he is joined by other civic leaders.

Leading Women Approve Idea.

Mrs. R. M. Walker thoroughly approves of the "Let's Go, Atlanta" campaign, and holds that the future is full of opportunities for everybody.

"There is no sense in looking backward," Mrs. Walker asserted. "Citizens should cease lamenting over the past, look to the future. Atlantans must work for the future of the city, and from that united effort golden opportunities will come."

Mrs. Walker is a leading member of social, club, church and cultural circles.

Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, secretary to the city board of review, who has resided in Atlanta all of her life and has watched its great progress, gives her stamp of approval to the "Let's Go, Atlanta" movement.

"I believe that if we catch the spirit of this movement and co-operate with the plan, the result will be all that we can expect or desire," said Mrs. Richardson.

Mrs. Albert S. Adams, newly elected commissioner of the Girl Scout Council, says, "I heartily indorse this movement, which I am certain will contribute largely to Atlanta's leadership."

Florida Places Ban On Old Georgia Tags

Georgians who expect to visit Florida in motor cars after Tuesday should provide their cars with Georgia license tags, according to Charles A. Cook, secretary of Dixie Motor Club, formerly Dixie Associated Motorists, who said Governor Dave Scholtz, of Florida, had declined to extend the time limit for Georgia cars.

Following the extension of time to March 1 for 1933 tags by Commissioner Paul A. Doyle, the Dixie Motor Club telegraphed a request to the Florida governor for extension of time for cars from this state. The governor replied that he had been advised by the Florida attorney-general that he had no authority for such a move. Mr. Cook said that many Georgians were preparing to motor in Florida during February and that in order to escape the compulsion of buying Florida tags, they must procure 1933 Georgia licenses.

Jap Naval Maneuvers To Cover Large Area

TOKYO, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Admiral Mineo Osumi, the naval minister, told the Associated Press today that the navy's 1933 maneuvers, beginning late in August, will cover a large area of the seas "southward of the islands composing the territory of the Japanese empire" but he declined to confirm or deny whether they will extend to the mandated islands in the equatorial Pacific.

The navy minister's comments, however, strongly implied that the zone of operations would include at least a portion of the mandates—the Mariannes, Carolines and Marshalls.

"If the fleet should maneuver as far south as the mandated islands," Admiral Osumi said, "it would be nothing new as our warships often have been there."

The navy minister explained that the 1933 war games would be the "grand maneuvers" held every third year with the entire navy participating.

"Such a big event cannot be staged on the Sea of Japan owing to the lack of space," he said. "There is nothing significant in it."

FALL DATE PROPOSED FOR CONGRESS SESSIONS

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(AP)—Fixing the date for the convening of the second annual sessions of congress under the new "lame duck" amendment on the first Monday in October was asked today in a bill by Senator Dill, democrat, Washington.

The newest constitutional amendment provides that every session shall begin on January 3 of each year, but adds a provision that the date for the meeting of the second session ca.. be fixed by law. The second session now meets in odd years.

AUTO RIDE IN COUNTRY IS ENJOYED BY HOOVER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—(UP)—Taking advantage of a bright, sunny afternoon, President Hoover today went for a long automobile drive in the country. Frequently Mr. Hoover takes brief spins around town after Sunday church services. He often directs his chauffeur to drive down Pennsylvania avenue so he may see progress on the public building program.

Today was the first time in many weeks, however, the president has gone on a long drive outside Washington.

Celery Destruction Voted To Hike Price

SANFORD, Fla., Jan. 28.—(AP)—Immediate destruction of one-third of the celery crop, classed by observers as one of the finest this section has produced in several years, as a means of bolstering a sagging market, was voted unanimously here today at a special meeting of the Seminole Agricultural Club.

S. R. Dighton, secretary of the Florida Celery Shippers, Inc., said the action was duplicated by growers in the Manatee county celery section. Dighton said he had notified all celery shipping organizations today that fully 85 per cent of the growers were in sympathy with the movement.

Celery growers expressed the belief that this is the first time in the history of the industry in the state that such a drastic step has been considered.

Death Visits Reunion.

For years Lumberjack Dillschneider, of Merzig, Germany, has been at odds with his pal, a fellow lumberjack. Misgivings as to the transientness of this life gripped them both, and they agreed to meet to seek a reconciliation. Drinking deeply at a wayside inn, both swore friendship until death should them part. Death parted them quickly when Lumberjack Dillschneider, a cautious man, drew a dagger, which he had brought to the peace meeting, and stabbed and killed his newly reconciled friend in an argument over who was to pay for the peace drinks.

Duck Shot With Airgun.

Walter Schmid, of Fort Worth, Texas, smiled indulgently when his son, Mickey, set off with an airgun and a fox terrier, to hunt ducks. Mickey left his lunch under a tree and returned to find a duck eating his food. He stunned it with his airgun and the fox terrier retrieved it. The duck is fattening in Mickey's backyard.

$4,000,000 LESS FOR ROADS IN 1933

Board Claims It Has No Means of Taking Care of Tag Cut Deficit.

Without providing for any loss of revenue due to a reducfion in the price of automobile license tags, the income of the state highway department will be more than $4,000,000 less than its 1932 income, Captain J. W. Barnett, chairman of the highway commission, reported to the house of representatives Saturday.

The statement was given to the house in compliance with a recently adopted resolution which called upon the department to furnish the legislature with information on its revenue for the last three years, revenue expected for 1933, why the board had anticipated revenue in letting contracts and what reductions had been made in expenditures.

$7,925 From Gas Tax.

Captain Barnett said the department anticipated a 1933 income of $11,523,978.21, adding that the board already had provided for spending $2,928,036.33 during the year. He estimated that the department would receive this year a total of $7,925,000 from the gasoline tax, $3,500,000 from the motor vehicle license tax, $71,463.52 from federal aid and $27,514.69 from other sources.

Income from the license tags last year was slightly less than $4,000,000. However, the house of representatives at the request of Governor Eugene Talmadge already has passed a bill providing for a sliding scale of license tags fees of from $3 to $15 as compared with a scale of $11.25 and $30 received last year.

The department stated it received $16,806,493 67 in 1930; $21,426,000.31 in 1931, and $15,643,652.36 last year.

Regarding the anticipated revenue, Chairman Barnett said total of $2,928,036.33 in outstanding obligations would mature within the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933.

Planned Finances.

"The finances of the department have been so planned as to enable the department to continue to function on the present basis and discharge all outstanding obligations leaving a substantial monthly balance for each remaining month of the fiscal year, and have on hand July 1, 1933, $1,342,793.30 with which to continue construction." No reference is made to outstanding federal aid contracts since state funds are not involved.

The statement said the board had anticipated the revenue by making the contracts "in accordance with instructions of the state's attorney" and that they mature within "our fiscal year. Relying on this and on the court decision that the department has authority to anticipate its revenue, these contracts have been made."

Has Cut Salaries.

Regarding the reduction of expenses, the chairman said "realizing the extent to which the revenue of the department was being reduced in the by the falling off of gas and tag tax and the inability to sell the Western & Atlantic railroad rental notes purchased under legislative instruction, the board proceeded to curtail expenditures by a 15 per cent reduction in salaries and reduction of personnel in all branches of this department in 1932.

"A comparison of the pay rolls of this department with those of other departments requiring equal skill and responsibility will reveal the fact that they compare favorably with any. Every possible effort has been made to eliminate waste and extravagance on the part of the employes of the department."

The statement said no new contracts have been made for 1933 and 1934 with the various counties for convict labor. It said that the estimated revenue given for the year plus that of the first half of 1934 will enable the department to assist the counties and the state in caring for 7,360 misdemeanor and felony convicts "providing the funds allotted to the department are not materially reduced."

Georgia Marble Urged For P. O. in Columbus

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The Georgia congressional delegation today called upon Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Ferry K. Heath to urge the use of marble in the construction of the new postoffice building in Columbus.

He advised the delegation that he would make a re-survey of the situation and that if marble could be used without conflicting too much with the government's economy program or with plans already made for constructing the building, it might be substituted for limestone.

Senators George and Russell who were present at the conference expressed satisfaction with the attitude taken by Mr. Heath and Representative John Wood, of Canton, said that he felt reasonably sure that if Heath could approve the use of marble without violating congressional or departmental policy, he would do so.

Congress has already appropriated $270,000 for the Columbus building. It was explained to Mr. Heath that if marble was authorized it would greatly benefit hundreds of unemployed quarry workers in the state.

Estate of Edith McCormick Declared Practically Valueless

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—(AP)—The estate of the late Edith Rockefeller McCormick, once known as the world's richest woman, was reported by attorneys today to be practically valueless at present market prices. It was in real estate projects. Her vast holdings in Standard Oil, of which her father was founder, have been sold, it was reported.

Edwin D. Krenn, confidant and business advisor for the social leader, was disclosed to be living modestly despite his inheritance of five-twelfths of her estate.

Kreen's share of the estate was insufficient to ay him the $2,000 a month for which the architect agreed to forfeit claim to his inheritance, his business partner, Edward A. Dato, announced. The agreement has been voided.

"The money to pay Mr. Krenn $2,000 a month simply is not available," Dato said. "He never did receive any of the payments.

"There is a $500,000 mortgage on Mrs. McCormick's Lake Shore drive home. We can't rent the house and the interest payments must be met. The home is a terrible liability.

"Other big real estate holdings of the estate are non-productive and actually are a drain on the resources. There is no cash on hand."

Only a recovery in real estate values, Dato said, would restore the estate to a profit-making basis. Mrs. McCormick's holdings once were valued at $40,000,000.

Claims against the estate have used up more than the $1,032,000 in personal property, including a famous collection of jewels, which the daughter of John D. Rockefeller left on her death from cancer last August.

Associates of Mrs. McCormick said she suffered personal losses rather than injure her friends financially by dumping stock holdings on the market when market values began to decline. She had advised many of her friends to purchase certain stocks and if Mrs. McCormick sold her own large holdings the values would have dropped immediately.

At the time of her death, however, most of the stocks were gone and her finances tied up in realty of the Edith Rockefeller McCormick trust.

The other heirs—Mrs. Elisha Dyer Hubbard, the former Muriel McCormick; Mrs. Max Oser, the former Mathilde McCormick, who married a Swiss riding master, and Fowler McCormick, son of Mrs. McCormick—were said to have reached the conclusions that their shares from the estate probably would be slight.

Dato said Krenn had adopted a frugal mode of life and had cancelled plans for a world cruise.

Lawrence Tibbett, Who Sings Here, Has Enjoyed Picturesque Career

Lawrence Tibbett, the renowned baritone who will be heard in recital at the auditorium on Friday evening, February 17, under the auspices of the All-Star Concert series, has had one of the most colorful and successful careers of any American singer.

Tibbett's father, sheriff of Kern county, California, died a hero's death in sounding up a gang of bandits when Lawrence was six years old. Mrs. Tibbett then took her three children to Los Angeles. After being graduated from the School of Manual Arts, Tibbett toured with a Shakespearean repertory company, headed by Tyrone Power. Always Tibbett had sung. When opportunity to train his voice with good teachers came he took it. He was unable to choose between singing and acting as a career.

The World War broke in on this. Lawrence Tibbett entered the United States navy, traveling as far as Vladivostok, Russia. The armistice brought him honorable discharge.

Back into his former routine Tibbett settled for a while, finally deciding to go to New York to gain finishing advantages as a singing-actor. Six months after his arrival in New York he had been signed by the Metropolitan Opera Company.

There, early in his second season, as Ford in Verdi's "Falstaff," came his first big opportunity. He aroused the greatest demonstration ever given a singer at that institution. Sustaining increased celebrity each season since, Tibbett is now recognized as the greatest singing-actor of the day, and the most popular star of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Lawrence Tibbett was the featured artist in the gala opening performance of the Metropolitan Opera this season—the only man other than the late Caruso ever to be so honored. The opera in which he appeared, Verdi's "Simon Boccanegra," had thrice been withdrawn from the stage as a failure, but Tibbett has made of it one of the masterpieces of the Metropolitan's repertoire. "The Emperor Jones," especially produced by the Metropolitan as a starring vehicle for Tibbett, had its world premiere recently and its amazing success was a history making event.

Not only has Tibbett scaled the heights in opera, but his success in concert and motion pictures has been equally as great.

Lawrence Tibbett is the most heralded musician of the day. Within the last month such national publications as the Literary Digest, Time, New Yorker, Good Housekeeping, Pictorial Review and Vanity Fair have had featured articles pertaining to his achievements.

Superintendent's Message

My dear Boys and Girls:

I wish to write to you about the most fundamental of all subjects which boys and girls can study; namely, music. It has been a delight to hear the voices of the children in the choruses through the schools; to see the fine bands, the splendid orchestras in our high schools, and to hear the boys and girls play individually or in groups.

Long before we ever studied any printed matter or knew anything about symbols of writing, music was a fine art and rhythm was fundamental to the make-up and progress of humanity. Therefore, every boy and every girl should study music, should learn to play with others, to sing with others, to co-operate in orchestras, bands, glee clubs, and should bring his or her bit to contribute to the music of the whole group.

Music brings out the best in us. It was not an accident that the Shepherd King of Israel, playing his heart out in order to revive King Saul, found wonderful thoughts coming into his own mind. It is not an accident that soldiers fight best when their music is most inspiring. It is not an accident that the greatest thoughts of the world have come to men and women in measured terms that we call poetry, which is another form of music. So I wish you all to study music.

In this connection, I wish to call your attention to the fact that on Friday, February 3, at 3 o'clock, at the Wesley Memorial church, the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra will appear under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Study Club. This will be the only opportunity Atlanta will have this year of having a symphony orchestra and this will be a matinee for 25 cents, given especially for the school children of Atlanta. Mrs. DeLos Hill and the men and women of the Atlanta Music Study Club have made this possible for you, and I hope you will talk to your mother and father and that a very large number of you will attend.

Always your friend,
WILLIS, A. SUTTON, Superintendent of Schools.

MURPHY GRADUATES HAVE CLASS PARTY

Murphy's graduation was held in the school auditorium last Thursday, January 26. Bible reading by Margaret Barrett opened the program. Interesting speeches were made by Felix Sharpton and Martha Bartlett, and a welcome address was given by Harry Allen, president of the student body. "Sundown" and "Neapolitan Nights" were sung in three parts by the senior class, and a special number was sung by members of the senior glee club.

The seniors enjoyed their senior party given on Tuesday night, January 24. An interesting program was presented and delicious refreshments were served. The class prophecy was read and it afforded a big laugh for all.

Murphy wishes to extend its heartiest greetings to the freshmen who entered here this semester.

PEEPLES SCHOOL HONORS STANTON WITH EXERCISES

High 6 will begin celebration of the Georgia bicentennial by making Frank L. Stanton and his work the theme of their "On-to-junior high" promotion exercises. The principal has had framed for the occasion a very large life-like photograph of him obtained at the office of The Atlanta Constitution, for which paper he used to write.

Felton Philips will first tell us about "Frank L. Stanton, the Man." Billy Francis will speak of "Stanton, the Writer of Dialect." Martha Nalley and Dorothy Enterkin will give readings showing his love of people. Margaret Caldwell and Margaret Jones will show by selections his love of nature. His sense of humor will be brought about by Billie Mae Jewell and Ernestine Mosely. "A Sharp Politician" and "Keep-a-Goin'," read by Henry Suder and Weyman Townsend, will show his sunny optimism.

Mary Sue Collum, Nellie Claire Irwin, Dorothy Flowers, Carlton White and Annie Laurie Rawls will recite dialect poems. Arlene Metzer and Kathryn Simmons will give the story of the writing of songs. "Jest a Wearyin' fer You" and "Mighty Lak a Rose," after which they will be sung by a group of children. "Sweet Miss Mary" and "Georgia" will be sung by the class.

CALHOUN SCHOOL IMPROVES LOOKS WITH SHRUBBERY

Our school yard is looking beautiful now. Mr. Burgess sent out a corps of men to work on it, and they planted shrubbery, which we hope will live and grow.

The second grade have been checking up on their weight chart, and are glad to see that many have gained. Those who have not gained are going to try to sleep more, drink more milk, and eat plenty of vegetables.

The third grade are very much interested in the study of Georgia, and were highly complimented by Miss Massengale on the amount of information they had on their state.

Low 5 enjoyed their visit to the state capitol last Thursday. They saw many interesting and educational things.

Low six made beautiful party favors for the High 6 graduation party.

High 6 had some beautifully decorated programs for their graduation exercises, the typing being done by one of the pupils of the high sight conservation class.

GIRLS' HIGH SELECTS LEADS FOR OPERETTA

Girls' High Glee Club prepares to begin the new semester with the new cast of "Your Royal Highness," a comic operetta by Arthur Penn, practicing on Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons in preparation for the March performances. On Thursday, January 19, Elizabeth Mann, Evelyn Strickland, Elizabeth Kilpatrick, Mildred Keisler, Laura Lee Baggarly, Eleanor Rogers, Roxana Cotsakis, Edwina Boyle, Evelyn Angell and Tillie Bach were selected to carry the leading roles, with the support of 13 minor characters and a chorus.

Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools, visited the staff of the Girls' High Times Tuesday, January 24, to ask that one issue of the paper be given over to the celebration of Georgia's two-hundredth birthday. Mr. Sutton's plan is to have all four of the city high schools have a special issue reviewing the history of Georgia and telling about the interesting men she has produced. Each school is to print 500 extra copies and send them to high schools in different sections of the United States. "In this way," Mr. Sutton explained to the High Times staff, "every high school which receives a paper can present a program about Georgia, and people will really learn something about our state."

GOLDSMITH PLANS FOR CELEBRATION OF BICENTENNIAL

Goldsmith enjoyed Miss Slocumb's visit. We had many lovely things to tell her and were glad she came in time to see The Constitution photographers take a picture of the tree we planted in honor of James Oglethorpe.

Our plans for the bicentennial are growing every day. Soon we will invite you out to see our wonderful tableaux we are so excited about.

The show to help raise money for the beautiful curtain in the auditorium was a great and huge success. The auditorium was packed and candy and cakes sold helped swell the curtain fund.

Junior Red Cross was kind in sending us some lovely Poland scrap books made by some Red Cross members at Random school in Poland. The language has been translated into English so we can read it. We are planning to exchange some of our work with our foreign friends.

COMMERCIAL AWARDS HONORS TO STUDENTS

Dorothy Akin, C-1, was awarded the Annie T. Wise cup presented each semester to the best all-round graduate, at the Commercial High school exercises held Tuesday, January 24, in the Bass Junior High schol auditorium. Gold C's were given to Athena Calamiros, Marie Clarke, Elizabeth Laxon, Rachel Manning and Evelyn Shaw for making an average of 90 or above for the three year's high school course. Diplomas were presented to 84 students by Dr. Noah W. Baird, president of the board of education.

COUCH TEACHERS AND PUPILS HAVE GOOD ATTENDANCE

The curtain has rung down on the first semester. Tomorrow we take our places in "highs," whereas only last Friday we were humble "lows." What a change! L-6 will move into H-6 room while H-6—how we shall miss this class!—will leave for O'Keefe and Maddox Junior High.

Charles Penn has made a very creditable booklet for a kindergartener. It is filled with pictures of handsome skyscrapers which Charles cut out and pasted, not an easy task for untrained five-year-old fingers.

The school feels a personal loss in the retirement of Miss Janie T. Solomon, assistant supervisor of physical education. Always cheerful, sympathetic and enthusiastic, Miss Solomon made her department a real delight to the classes and her visits were hailed with pleasure as signals for games, plays, dances and rhythmical exercises, so close to the life of every healthy child. Couch's good wishes follow her. Both teachers and pupils place the "well-done" stamp of approval on Miss Solomon's work.

Frank Jackson, of Mrs. Janet Galway's class, has made a replica of Westbrook, the birthplace of Oglethorpe, founder of Georgia, whose ancestral home is in Godalming, overlooking the river Wye and just 30 miles out from London town.

And now I am about to broadcast the names of the children whose punctuality, diligence and behavior have made them leaders of their grades during this second quarter. Here is the list: Mary Rena Cox, Martha Dodd, Margaret Brown, Paul Walker, Alice Rose Penn, D. B. Reed, Jean Dodd, Dorothy Eller, Ruby Penn, Mary Stowe, Paul Dodd, Ruth Barber, Dorothy Ann Maner, Charles Pannell, Jack Tarrant, Louise Shaw, Robert Jeffares.

SCHOOL VISITOR RELATES STORIES TO JONES PUPILS

Jerome Jones had a visitor they enjoyed very much on Tuesday morning, Dr. Stuart Oglesby, who told the fourth, fifth and sixth grades some very interesting stories. He was telling us what the pin said to him and we think it would be splendid if we could be as straight and clean and honest as that pin.

We enjoyed the trained animal show so much one afternoon last week. We were proud of Henry Odom in the kindergarten, who told the name of an animal no one else could guess.

The kindergarten have a new sliding board and they enjoy it very much.

The first grade is working hard to get promoted.

The fifth grade has selected its bicentennial committee. Helen Sears is chairman, with Jacque Copeland, Dorothy Blackman and Bob McCurry working with her.

The chief item of interest at Bass Junior High school is the election of the president of the student body, which took place on Wednesday, January 26. Mary Anne Noland, Roy Goree, Marion Bell and Jean Fambrough were elected out of the ninth grade to run for the office. The school considers it a great loss to lose Ninette Carter, the former president of the school, who has entered Girls' High. She proved to be a very beneficial and capable leader.

The graduation exercises of the ninth high took place on Thursday, January 27, in the auditorium. The theme of the program was "School and Home Citizenship." Ninette Carter and Avery Means were elected as the speakers for the occasion. The special guests of the class present at the exercises were: Mrs. Eugene Talmadge, Mrs. R. B. Russell, Mrs. Z. V. Peterson, Mrs. A. E. Wilson, Mrs. Bryan Matthews, Mrs. George W. Powell, Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, Miss Sue Steiner Hook, Mrs. John Perdue and Mrs. R. H. Wawkinson. Immediately following the exercises the P.-T.-A. entertained at a luncheon for the class in the cafeteria.

The Georgia bicentennial pageant, held on January 19 and 20, was one of the most beautiful performances ever presented at Bass. The queen, Mary Anne Noland, and her court presented a beautiful scene, as did the dancers in their colorful and attractive costumes. The success of the pageant is due to Miss Helen Clapp, director of physical education.

Urban League Bulletin

By JESSE O. THOMAS.

The Atlanta Urban League will hold its eleventh annual meeting at the Wheat Street Baptist church, corner Young street and Auburn avenue, tonight at 8 o'clock. Dr. D. Witherspoon Dodge, pastor of the Radio church, is to be the principal speaker and his subject will be "The Human Implications of Technocracy." A report of the work of the local branch, for the past year, will be given by the league's executive secretary, Reginald A. Johnson.

The National Urban League was organized in 1911 in New York city by the merger of the committee for improving the industrial conditions of the negroes in New York, on urban conditions and the National League for the Protection of Colored Women. From this organization branches were set up in the principal cities in the United States until today there are some 50 cities throughout the country with branches and affiliated organizations with paid staffs carrying on the work of the Urban League. The original committee is now known as the National Urban League and has a general advisory connection with its various branches. The board of the national organization as well as the boards of the branches are interracial, composed of the leaders in their various fields in each community and a staff which is entirely colored, is composed of some 250 persons.

The purpose of the organization is social work among negroes in those fields where there is no program for colored. Projects in such problems as health, housing, industrial relations, delinquency and other fields, are carried on by each branch in accordance with the need of the particular community that it is operating in.

The Atlanta branch of the Urban League was organized 11 years ago and is supported by the Community Chest. From the local organization's report we find that six acres of gardens were planted, which provided food for the entire summer and fall to 140 people. A girls' club, two housewife units, a mechanic's exchange, three trade groups, one of brick masons, one of painters, one of carpenters and a cleaners' and dyers' group were organized during the year. Approximately 100 jobs were secured as result of these groups and 135 meetings held with an attendance of 1,788. Two clubs of special delivery boys were continued throughout the year and 73 cases handled, involving employment problems, evictions, transients, delinquency and other types of cases that did not come under the jurisdiction of the other organized agencies in the city. Many other problems were handled by the organization such as attempting to secure shelter for lone men, conducting a vocational opportunity campaign and assisting many groups in the community in regard to their program such as the Boy Scouts, the Forum Council, Community Chest drive, Atlanta School of Social Work and many others.

A testimonial was tendered a very interesting character of the Atlanta negro business world last Monday evening. W. A. Scott, publisher and owner of the Southern Newspaper Syndicate, was honored for the work he has done in the negro newspaper world. He was born in Edwards, Miss., in 1902. Educated at Jackson and Morehouse Colleges, and after teaching school for a short time began his business career in 1928, by publishing in Jacksonville, Fla., and Atlanta, Ga., a city directory of negro businesses. During the same year he founded the Atlanta World as a weekly newspaper, changing it to a semi-weekly in 1930, a tri-weekly the same year, and developed the paper into a daily early in 1932.

With the Atlanta World as a first link in the Southern Newspaper Syndicate, the Birmingham World and the Memphis World, both semi-weeklies, were founded. In June, 1931, the first page of comics by a negro cartoonist was inserted, and the first nationally distributed rotogravure by negroes was published later in the year and today is used by 37 negro newspapers.

The Southern Newspaper Syndicate, under Publisher Scott's direction, has grown to where 24 newspapers are printed wholly or in part in the home office in Atlanta every week. There is a 24-page national edition of the World published every Sunday. Seventy full-time employes and 500 newsboys are employed by the Southern Newspaper Syndicate in Atlanta.

The coming of Dr. W. E. B. DuBois as a guest professor on the faculty of Atlanta University for the second semester, is of special interest because of his contributions as a scholar, and writer. Dr. DuBois will give to his classes a rich wealth of experience such as few teachers are able to do.

Since 1910 Dr. DuBois has been the director of publications of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the editor of its official organ, the Crisis. Dr. DuBois has obtained a leave of absence to serve at Atlanta University for five months and will edit the Crisis from Atlanta, during this period.

"Changing Politics of the Negro," was the subject for discussion at the 27 Club Forum Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock with Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, director of women's work of the Commission on Interracial Co-operation, as the principal speaker. Mrs. Ames has been a delegate to several national democratic conventions.

Fulton P.-T. A. Council Officials Tell of Lunch Room Project

Mrs. W. M. Schneider, president of the Fulton County Council of Parents and Teachers, and Mrs. C. G. Trowbridge, chairman of the lunch room project fostered by this organization, issue the following information in regard to this activity, which no doubt will prove helpful to other parent-teacher associations:

"Realizing the importance of well-nourished school children and the effect that the present economic crisis is having on the food allowance, the Fulton county council, with Mrs. W. M. Schneider, president, is again this year giving much time and attention to this phase of their work.

"With this in mind a special lunch room committee was appointed last October. Care was taken in appointing the committee to secure people who would represent the different activities within the school system.

"The plan of work was received by the council with much interest, after which it was presented by the committee chairman and the council president to the board of education to secure their interest and co-operation. This board passed a resolution indorsing the plan of work and commended it very highly to the principals and teachers of Fulton county, urging each one to give his whole-hearted co-operation in carrying out the plans.

"More information was desired in regard to the present status of the school lunches before calling a lunch room study group meeting. Therefore, questionnaires with as much personal visits as feasible was decided on as the best method to use for this particular school system. The questions were mailed with a letter from the committee chairman and the superintendent to each principal. The information secured will be used as a basis for the lunch room study groups, which will be conducted by the home economics teachers as in previous years.

"It is the earnest desire of this committee to be of the greatest help possible in raising the nutrition standard of the children of Fulton county."

Others co-operating with Mrs. Schneider and Mrs. Trowbridge in this project are Knox Walker, elementary supervisor; Leila Bunce, home economics supervisor; Margaret Wallace, grammar school principal; Mrs. Franklin Davis, president of E. Rivers P.-T. A.; Joyce Henderson, home economics of North Fulton High.

State P.-T. A. President's Poem of Tribute To National Founders Is Published

By MRS. BRUCE CARR JONES, Regional Publicity Director for the National Parent-Teacher Association.

"A Tribute" to the founders of the national congress—a poem by Mrs. R. H. Hankinson, president of the Georgia congress, is featured in the January issue of Child Welfare magazine in suggestions for the annual celebration, February 17.

"We do not forget, even in far off Hawaii," writes Mrs. Oma Duncan, principal of the Alaa school, who was a pupil several years ago of the national president, Mrs. Hugh Bradford, when she conducted a class in parent-teacher work in the islands. Their celebration was conducted in two languages, with the lighting of candles on a birthday cake and the usual offering to further extend parent-teacher work.

A course of study for parents and teachers, "The Behavior of Children and Adults," has recently been published through the co-operation of the Michigan congress and the University of Michigan. The subject matter has been carefully selected and arranged to encourage self-helpful methods of observing and studying. The behavior studied is chiefly that in which the home is interested and study group outlines are provided with the course.

The little town of Black Mountain, in the mountains of North Carolina, a locality rich in summer assemblies, camps, etc., had a children's clinic which attracted parents and children from a large number of neighboring states. It has been transformed into a parenthood institute, sponsored by the North Carolina congress, the state board of health and other agencies. The local motion picture theater provided a place of meeting and speakers and teachers connected with other enterprises in the vicinity contributed their services. During the third year, a particularly effective innovation was made—a series of luncheon round tables at which registrants and lecturers met informally and discussed topics of interest. This summer will mark the fifth session of the Southern Parenthood Institute.

The growing interest in parent education conferences was demonstrated in the state of Washington when a recent check in registration showed that 3,250 parents and educators attended the four conferences held in different cities during October. In Seattle alone, where the national congress will meet in May, 2,700 attended the conference.

That the board of managers of the Georgia congress, in its announced intention of holding a school of instruction for its members at the coming state convention in Savannah, is not alone in its effort to improve its technique is evident from the fact that the state board of the Colorado congress recently held a two-day conference in Denver for its members and county superintendents under the leadership of Mrs. Charles E. Roe, national field secretary.

Over 200 registered from 20 counties, each registrant being given a folder containing mimeographed copies of the plan of the various state chairmen. Each phase of the work was discussed by the respective chairmen and an opportunity given for questions. Such a conference is an opportunity for instruction of workers, and a means of co-ordinating and stimulating the work through the state.

"Know Your School" has been adopted by the South Dakota congress as the slogan for parent-teacher programs this year, and an outline based on the state curriculum in the public schools has been prepared for the use of local units.

The Oklahoma state department of education is encouraging the formation of parents' study groups, and has issued through its home economics division a printed form to be used by such groups. This form gives the requirements for such groups wishing recognition by the state, suggestions for their organization, and sources of information and material.

The department of classroom teachers of the National Education Association recently amended its constitution to include the following statement in the aims and purposes of the department: "To co-operate with parent-teacher associations and other civic bodies having educational objectives in order to secure better community understanding and appreciation of the problems and the value of the public schools."

"To foster such use of radio as will make it effectively serve the best interests of boys and girls," is the objective of the new national congress committee on radio. The resolution adopted at the 1932 convention reads: "We believe that radio is a form of education and should be used to enrich and extend home and community life; that the broadcasting channels should be properly regulated by national and state authorities and freed from objectionable advertising."

U.D.C. Executive Board Findings Related by Georgia Division Editor

By MRS. L. W. GREENE, Of Sycamore, State Editor of Georgia Division, U. D. C.

The really purposeful features of the U. D. C. executive board meeting, so recently held in Macon, as the honored guest of the Sidney Lanier chapter, U. D. C., enlisting the interest of women throughout the state who have an active part in the various preliminaries, programs and commitments of the organization, were a realignment of the past year's successful departmental work by the officers and state chairmen, and the presentation, in part, of the largely expansive program, which is being worked out for the effective future of the Georgia division, U. D. C.

As usual to pre-year gatherings of the board members, there was no dearth of good, responsible resolutions drafted, and it was increasingly apparent that for every endeavor that had reached attainment the past year there were bright, new plans supplementing appealing necessities, to pep up the spirit of the meeting and to lead it forward into 1933 with a very general willingness to keep right on the job. There was a lot doing at this meeting, for it buzzed with an energetic sway, yet it displayed a smiling face and in no instance was there lack of harmony. Mrs. I. Bashinski, with skillful exactness, outlined measures that had been legalized at the past convention, including the card-filing system; that a room be secured at Rhodes Memorial hall; that a contract be renewed at Rabun Gap-Nacoochee school; that minutes of the last convention be delivered on or before January 1 to the printer, and stated that she was instructed to bring a request from the Confederate veterans assembled in reunion that after this year they wished to hold their annual reunion at the time and place of the U. D. C. convention. She expressed regret at the discontinued publication of the "Veteran," and praised the custodian of convention property for her exact accounting for all valuables.

As chairman of resolutions, Mrs. Walter Grace, past president of the organization, presented resolutions opposing a proposal to mark the route taken by General W. T. Sherman on his march of destruction through Georgia to the sea, which was unanimously adopted by the board. Other resolutions adopted included sincere thanks to Mrs. John G. Harrison, president, and members of Sidney Lanier chapter, U. D. C., for their gracious hospitality and many courtesies extended, and especially made mention of the luncheon, at which Mrs. Harrison presided as toastmistress, with charming grace. A resolution of thanks was also extended Mrs. James H. Blount, mother of Mrs. Walter D. Lamar, who sent flowers presented her on her 90th birthday anniversary, to beautify the luncheon table. Providing that the state president may be empowered to select the evening for the historical program, stated another resolution, which was approved.

Preceding the meeting of the board by a day, Mrs. L. M. Bashinsky, past president general, U. D. C., of Troy, Ala., who has attained conspicuous renown as a brilliant orator and a leader of outstanding influence in establishing patriotic ideals, as the central figure of the Lee birthday celebration held at Mercer University and Lanier High School for Boys, on the 19th instant, gave the address of the day, presenting the life and character of General Lee, so delicately adjusted to the sublime, that her hearers easily visioned the "light from within," which animates her messages and imparts to them a classical beauty. Mrs. I. Bashinski presented the speaker. Others prominent in U. D. C. work were Mesdames T. W. Reed, J. H. Simmons, Frank Dennis, L. W. Greene, Walter Grace, W. D. Lamar, Mark O'Daniel and Miss Caroline Patterson.

Mrs. John G. Harrison presided over the meeting. A signal pleasure accorded the members of the board was to have a cup of tea with Mrs. James Blount on her 90th birthday at the home of Mrs. Walter D. Lamar, her daughter. Mrs. Blount, as honoree and epitome of the old south of song and story, was a beloved figure, transcendent in a regalness of having lived long and been kind. The musical concert of Rachmaninoff, at which they were honor guests, made of this meeting one long to be appreciated.

Pelham chapter, U. D. C., met at the clubrooms January 18 with Mesdames Reid Kemp, W. B. Ryan, Jackson Culpepper, F. C. Gammage and L. J. Poitevint as hostesses. The rooms were very attractively decorated with bowls of yellow jonquils. Mrs. L. J. Poitevint, the president, presided at the meeting and there were 30 members present. A report was made from the finance committee that $8 had been realized from the sale of a cake. Mrs. Jackson Culpepper told of her work with the Children of the Confederacy and their plans for further accomplishments. It was decided that the chapter purchase flags for the annual Georgia Day sale and a committee composed of Mrs. W. N. Nesmith, Mrs. Reid Kemp and Mrs. T. E. Lacy was appointed. The program was given under the direction of Mrs. A. S. Elliott, chairman, and appearing on the program were Miss Anne Mae McCollum, Kathryn Sharpe, Mrs. W. S. Hunt, Mrs. Jackson Culpepper and Nancy Harris.

The highlight of the January meeting of Quitman chapter was the decision of the members to donate to the library association the amount of $500 towards building the new library, for which plans have been accepted, the chapter being assured of an assembly room in this building for future meetings. The president, Mrs. C. T. Tillman, in whose home the meeting was held, expressed New Year greetings to the chapter in a poem written by Mrs. Herbert M. Franklin, poet laureate. She reported for the "Lest We Forget" committee, for which she is life chairman, that quite an amount of gifts, fruit, food and clothing had been given during December to veterans, widows of veterans and negro former slaves of this community. Mrs. S. S. Rountree, historian presented plans for the U. D. C. essay contest. A program on Lee, Jackson and Maury was carried out at the grammar school. Mrs. Hankinson Reports P.-T. A. Board Of Managers' Meeting in Columbus

By MRS. R. H. HANKINSON, President of the Georgia Congress, Parents and Teachers.

McDONOUGH, Ga., Jan. 28.—The meeting of the board of managers of the Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers held in Columbus last Monday provided a safe program for the uncertain days people generally are experiencing at the present time. The budget, set up a year ago, was readjusted to meet the new and unforseen problems and difficulties that have grown out of the condition of the times. There was a general tightening up all along the line that promises safety both from an economic standpoint and from the standpoint of activities.

Dr. Joe P. Bowdoin, director of the department of health, asked for continued interest in the "mother welfare" and mouth hygiene programs, and a special effort for general child health on May Day. Mrs. Guy Hudson will have the assistance of the state department of health in carrying out the summer round-up program.

Mrs. Bruce Carr Jones reports 50 per cent of the by-laws of local units and councils approved, and calls attention again to the fact that all standard associations must have such approval.

Mrs. Guy Wells, editor of The Parent-Teacher, reported the fourth issue ready for the press, and asked that all convention information from officers, directors and chairmen be mailed to her at once. Whatever chairmen wish to get before the units should be included in this issue. The convention number will carry the questionnaire for locals, and the tentative program.

The national congress will be represented at the convention by Mrs. Arthur Watkins, of Washington, D. C., who will conduct conferences daily on parent-teacher work. Mrs. Watkins regularly conducts the parent-teacher courses at Columbia University.

Mrs. Charles Center, Mrs. Katherine Weathersbee, Mrs. P. G. Hanahan, Mrs. Jere Wells and Mrs. Byron Mathhews represented the flying squardon, and report 21 schools of instruction conducted in nine districts of the state, with approximate attendance of 1,500 members.

Mrs. J. O. Martin and Miss Caro Love were slated to conduct a play evening at the Savannah convention. Atlanta, Columbus, Augusta, Savannah and Macon were given definite bicentennial and dinner arrangements.

Mrs. W. E. Monts, Washington; Mrs. H. V. Scarborough, Macon; Mrs. John Scott, LaGrange, and Mrs. Charles Trowbridge, Atlanta, reported unusual district achievements.

Newly bound copies of the minutes of the Georgia Congress from its very beginning were the gift of Mrs. M. E. Judd, chairman of efficiency, and were presented by the recording secretary, Mrs. Walter P. Jones, in the absence of Mrs. Judd, who was in attendance upon the session of the state board of control.

Mrs. Cooper Campbell, Mrs. Frank David, Mrs. Nunally Johnson, Mrs. Irving Rothschild and Mrs. B. E. Pulliam, official hostesses, were assisted in the entertainment of the guests by Mrs. Ralph Richards, Mrs. Holcomb Harper and Mrs. Willis Battle.

Outline of a legislative program was delayed, awaiting the decision of the leaders in the Georgia Education Association and the state department of education.

The "Buy American" plan was indorsed as the most promising program for the nation's emergence from the depression.

Child Labor Day, January 30, will serve as a rallying point for a campaign to raise the standards of child protection.

Pictured above are members of the Chapel Guild of Fort McPherson, who assemble each Tuesday at the Army Service Club to sew for the Red Cross. The garments fashioned by these members of the army set are used for needy Atlanta children. The upper picture presents, from left to right, Mrs. Thomas H. Ramsey, chairman of the sewing committee of the guild; her co-chairman, Mrs. Frank Child; Mrs. Francis Fuller, Mrs. William Stone, secretary of the guild; Mrs. Druid E. Wheeler, Mrs. John R. Dinsmore, Mrs. Albert H. Dumas and Mrs. Henry W. Robinson. In the lower photograph are, from left to right, Mrs. Walter F. Bates, Mrs. Charles Lovelace Foster, Mrs. Thomas Samuel Moorman, vice president of the guild; Mrs. Joseph Aman, chairman of the welfare committee; Mrs. Christian Bach, Mrs. William Henry Noble, Mrs. Ralph Finch and Mrs. George H. Estes, president of the guild. Photograph by George Cornett, staff photographer.

Slim fingers flew and sewing machines whirred busily Tuesday at Fort McPherson, Atlanta's army post, for members of the Chapel Guild had assembled to fashion garments for the needy children of the city. Responding wholeheartedly to the call from Red Cross headquarters for workers, the guild members, headed by the president, Mrs. George H. Estes, gracious wife of the commanding officer of the garrison, assemble each Tuesday morning in the army service club. Attesting to the success of the work is the enthusiastic praise received from the Red Cross officials and the business-like receipts issued by Miss Margaret Fetner, secretary, acknowledging the acceptance of 136 completed garments.

Effective Workroom.

The service club provides an effective workroom, presided over by the attractive and efficient Mrs. R. W. Barnett. Electric sewing machines owned by the members are brought each day and the garments completed to buttons, and button holes are neatly placed in the huge boxes. Dainty baby dresses, slips, tiny bootees, have been made and gay little print frocks ornamented with binding are now being worn by young members of the city. Dozens of blue shirts have been made and stacked neatly and delivered to the Red Cross officials by Mrs. Thomas H. Ramsey, chairman of the sewing committee.

Since early in November, each week the enthusiastic group of workers have met for the morning's sewing. Other engagements are canceled and the work of providing finished garments for Atlanta's needy is done by this group of adopted Atlantans who form such an interesting part of the garrison life. Gathered around the machines and busily sewing Tuesday were 16 members of the army set. Mrs. Estes was making a slip for a small girl, while Mrs. Thomas Samuel Moorman, the vice president of the guild, hemmed a small frock. Mrs. Walter F. Bates, having brought her electric machine, was stitching away, and Mrs. Charles Lovelace Foster and Mrs. Christian A. Bock, along with Mrs. William Henry Noble, were seated in a sunny window with their needlework.

Mrs. Francis Fuller, Mrs. Druid E. Wheeler and Mrs. Ralph Finch, a trio who had just returned from an early morning ride, were still attired in natty riding togs and did not stop to change, since the time was short.

And this group belied one's pet theory that any group of the feminine set gathers for chat, for there was no time for casual conversation. It was a busy time, each occupied with details of the work. A huge box containing garments already cut out occupied a center table, each carefully marked with the age of the child for whom it was designed. When anyone completed a task they appealed to Mrs. Ramsey for other work, and, reaching into the depth of the box, she brought fourth the next garment. Indeed, the atmosphere was so charged with desire to complete an array of garments that one member attempted to press the newspaper correspondent into service and she found herself busily threading a needle and stitching away.

Soldiers' Exchange.

Another service of the guild which is most unique is the Soldiers' Exchange, which is just what the name implies. Under the direction of the charity committee, with Mrs. Joseph Aman as chairman and Mrs. Ramsey and Mrs. Frank Child as assistants, garments, household furnishing and other usable articles are collected and placed in the exchange. Here members of the soldier group may go to find their needs fulfilled. Each brings something to exchange. Perchance the baby of the household has outgrown its last year's coat and needs another. The mother taking the coat visits the exchange and, leaving her little coat for someone else, is supplied with another. It's an interested, friendly sort of arrangement brought about by the guild members working in co-operation with Mrs. Barnett, who seems to have a perfect knack for doing the right thing in the right way.

And so the work of the guild continues and each year finds new ways to assist. Of course there is the special committee headed by Mrs. Walter F. Mecklin, who assists the chaplain in the arrangement of the chapel, and decorates the altar. There is the efficient secretary, Mrs. William Stone, and for treasurer there is Chaplain Fulcher, the only masculine member of the guild, who works in perfect sympathy with his assistants.

Mrs. Robert P. McLarty, hospital program chairman, announces that the Gordon-Epply School of Dancing cooperated with her in entertaining the patients at Hospital No. 48 on Friday evening. Many entertaining numbers were rendered by her pupils, among which were Doris Fowler, Eleanor Hicks, Mary Frances Davis, Hortense Jacobs, May Bernice Jacobs, Gloria Munn, Dorothy Ann Lawnius, Peddy Jacobs, Lawrence Jacobs and others.

Mrs. Arthur L. McCoy, rehabilitation chairman, reports the distribution each Friday of a package of cigarets to each patient in the two wards sponsored by Atlanta Unit No. 1 as well as 30 tray cloths donated by the unit for these wards.

Y.W.C.A. Elects Mrs. Robinson As President at Annual Meeting

Mrs. Julian Robinson, long identified with industrial work in the Young Women's Christian Association, was elected president of the Y. W. C. A. at the annual meeting of the membership held last evening. Serving with her will be Mrs. Dan M. Byrd and Mrs. Luther Rosser, first and second vice presidents; Miss Sue Brown Sterne and Miss Caroline Nicolson, recording and corresponding secretaries, and Mrs. James M. Carlton, treasurer.

Mrs. Robinson, as the former Miss Mary Murphy, is a charter member of the Atlanta Junior League and was one of the first league members appointed to Y. W. C. A. service. Her keen interest in the Y. W. C. A. being along industrial lines, she became the first chairman of the business and industrial girls' committee, and her splendid pioneer efforts laid the foundation for the extensive and substantial growth of these departments. Mrs. Robinson has the distinction of serving on the board during the administrations of Mesdames W. R. Prescott, S. F. Boykin, E. Marvin Underwood and the late Mrs. Archibald Davis. In addition to her work on the industrial committee, Mrs. Robinson devoted time to Girl Reserve activities and is interested in every phase of association work. She is an active leader in the First Methodist church, and, having lived i Atlanta all her life, enjoys a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

Mrs. E. Marvin Underwood, retiring president, has steered the Y. W. C. A. successfully through a year of reduced budget, increased service and unusual demands. Through her long service on the Y. W. C. A. board and her appointment to various state and national committees, Mrs. Underwood was well qualified for the presidency, and her term was characterized by capability and a sincere appreciation of the undertakings and problems. During the past year an emergency committee was created in order to have available a small fund for unexpected needs.

World Fellowship.

Under Mrs. Underwood's leadership, special emphasis has been placed on world fellowship and membership. The world fellowship committee was reorganized and during 1932 a substantial contribution was made to the world fellowship fund, by which associations are maintained in 48 foreign countries. A religious retreat was conducted previous to World Fellowship Week, with Mrs. Fletcher S. Brockman as leader.

A membership goal of 2,000 was established to interest more women in joining the Y. W. C. A. A semi-annual meeting held in October assembled the membership, when Y. W. C. A. beliefs were presented and definite contacts made with members on four other occasions. During the past year the work of the membership secretary was put on departmental basis.

Each department has shown as substantial growth, with statistics showing that more girls and women are being served by the Y. W. C. A. Varied classes and entertainments appealing to adolescent, business and industrial girsl resulted in business girls' attendance in the five clubs growing to 7,523; Girl Reserves 6,876. Industrial girls have enjoyed weekly programs at no cost, except for the nominal fee of 10 cents for suppers. Over 1,949 attended 50 regular meetings of this department and 619 attended extra events. The year of 1932 is known as "the bridge year" at Camp Highland, for the Lewis Beck Memorial bridge, spanning the Southern railway gorge, which was erected last June, is one of the outstanding improvements at camp in recent years. The regular camp season lasted only six weeks, but the attendance exceeded the eight-week season of 1931.

Y. W. C. A. Residence.

The Y. W. C. A. residence, due to its convenient location and comfortable accommodations, provided a friendly home for 1,457 guests during the year, and girls living there were proffered free use of the "Y" swimming pool and gymnasium, and medical exams were arranged without charge. Pleasant entertainments, weekly vesper service and friendly contacts created wholesome, cheerful surroundings for girls living away from home and appreciative of protected shelter within walking distance of the business section of the city.

Service given at the "Y" information desk included the thousands of questions answered, advice given and counsel to the unemployed and numerous other inquiries. The administration building, 37 Auburn avenue, has become a valued community center, with various organizations finding it convenient for meeting and conferences. The League of Hard of Hearing enjoyed social affairs held in the parlors twice monthly; Spanish and Italian clubs shared its hospitality, and inter-racial groups were welcomed. The stage in the spacious auditorium has been the scene of numerous plays and recitals and an estimated total of 12,705 people attended miscellaneous meetings during 1932.

Attendance in health education department shows an increase, with 14,918 attendance in 1931 and 17,180 in 1932. The feature of the past year's work is that unemployed girls and women, underprivileged Girl Reserves and others have received free medical exams, free swims and recreation.

The Phyllis Wheatly branch, where a similar program is carried on for negro women and girls, shows a total attendance of 5,876 at classes and activities. A review of the "Y" scrapbook reveals that nearly 200 newspaper articles, 22 photographs, 16 articles in other publications, 16 folders and pamphlets, 14 posters, 4 radio talks and 33 speeches before church groups endeavored to interpret to the public character-building services.

Interest Centers In Charming Army Matrons

Social life of the army contingent revolves in a large measure around attractive members of the army set, and a quintet of prominent representatives of the army group are pictured on today's feature page. Mrs. Daniel Taylor, slender, blond wife of Lieutenant Taylor, is one of the most admired of the younger contingent. Before her marriage she was Miss Essie Mae Winslow, of Greenville, N. C., and following their wedding trip this couple came to Fort McPherson to reside. This lovely southerner is a devotee of golf and plays both in Atlanta and on her vacation trips to the mountains of the Carolinas.

Mrs. J. K. Baker is the lovely wife of Lieutenant Baker. She is an army girl, for prior to her marriage she was Miss Grace Arrowsmith, daughter of Colonel George D. Arrowsmith and Mrs. Arrowsmith, of Fort McIntosh, Texas. From her lovely mother, Mrs. Baker and her small daughter, Carol Cragie Baker, inherit both beauty and charm, and little Carol Cragie represents the fourth generation of this army family, for her grandmother, whose name she bears, was formerly Miss Carol Cragie.

Mrs. Ira Porter, whose flashing smile is captured in her photograph, is the wife of Lieutenant Porter and is one of the prettiest members of the army group. Since their marriage, which was solemnized in the historic chapel at West Point, and following a wedding trip extending from New York to California, they have resided at the garrison. Mrs. Porter was the former Miss Francesca Rand, and she has resided in a number of the capitals of Europe where her father was a member of the diplomatic corps.

Interesting Mrs. Philip Taliaferro, the wife of Captain Taliaferro, has made her home in Ansley Park, and this hospitable rooftree has proved the Mecca for both military and civilian friends. Early in February Captain Taliaferro and Mrs. Taliaferro with their three children leave for New York, where they will embark on the U. S. A. T. Republic for Panama, where Captain Taliaferro will be stationed. Mrs. Taliaferro, with her striking brunet beauty and gracious manner, is a general favorite, and a host of friends regret the leave-taking of this popular couple.

Mrs. Joseph Aman, who possesses patrician loveliness, has a decided musical talent and finds time in her busy days to pursue her musical education. She plays the piano with exceptional skill and is studying the pipe organ under the careful tutelage of Atlanta instructors. Her little daughter, Elizabeth Aman, inherits the artistic talent of her mother, and in a recent play presented at Fort McPherson she appeared in the leading role, rendering a charming lullaby.

Binford-Booth Wedding Date Set For Feb. 11

Announcement is made today of the wedding plans of Miss Eleanor McCormick Binford and Harvey Bronson Booth, of Charlotte, N. C., whose engagement announcement recently occasioned widespread interest. Wednesday, February 11, has been chosen as the date for the quiet wedding ceremony, which will be solemnized at 10 o'clock in the morning in the chapel of St. Luke's Episcopal church. Rev. John Moore Walker will perform the ceremony in the presence of a small group of relatives and friends. Hugh Hodgson will have charge of the musical program.

Following the ceremony Mr. Booth and his bride will leave for Bridgewater, N. C., where they will spend a week in the mountains at the Georgia Power Company camp on a beautiful lake. They will make their future residence in Charlotte, N. C.

Miss Binford is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julien Binford Jr., formerly of Richmond, Va., and Mr. Booth is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Booth. The marriage between representatives of prominent southern families will be an outstanding event of the month.

Dancing Is Hobby Of New Governor.

Though Governor Eugene Talmadge insists that he is "a stiff-kneed farmer" and denies all claims to social graces, Atlanta society acknowledges him as one of its most graceful dancers. In fact, one suspects the terpsichorean art as one of his hobbies, for on occasions when he has appeared at the city's various club dances, not only his grace as a dancer but his keen enjoyment of the pastime as reflected in his happy countenance, has been the topic of interested discussion.

The governor does admit, however, that his lovely young daughter, Vera, who is known as Mrs. Charles Smyly, of Eastman, is his favorite dancing partner, for Mrs. Talmadge does not dance, due, doubtless, to her varied other interests and the countless demands made upon her time. As for tempo, the chief executive is not fastidious. Whether the

Mrs. Roosevelt To Be Honored At Tea Tuesday

Invitations have been issued by the trustees of Tallulah Falls school to a tea at which they will entertain Tuesday, January 31, at 4:30 o'clock, on the fifth floor of Rich's, in compliment to Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Included in the guest list for the tea are members of the Atlanta Young Matrons' Circle for Tallulah, the heads of the Atlanta groups working actively for Tallulah and a few additional guests. Receiving with Mrs. Roosevelt and Mrs. John K. Ottley, president of the Tallulah Falls school board of trustees, will be Governor and Mrs. Eugene Talmadge, Mayor James L. Key, Mrs. Walter Lamar, of Macon; Mrs. L. G. Hardman, of Commerce, and Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick, vice presidents of Tallulah school; Mrs. J. W. Gholston, of Comer, president of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Preston S. Arkwright, honorary president of the Young Matrons' Circle for Tallulah, and Mrs. William Akers, president of the circle.

An exhibit of handcraft work from the weaving, rug and basket shops of Tallulah Falls school will be on exhibit at the tea.

The general public is invited to hear Mrs. Roosevelt speak at 3:30 o'clock in Rich's tea room, on the "Social Values of Handcrafts." Her dominant interest for many years has been social betterment through education and one of her pet projects is the Val-Hill shop, at Hyde Park, N. Y., where men and boys have been trained for a long time to make beautiful early American furniture by hand and superlatively well. The conduct of this industry by Mrs. Roosevelt and her associates is entirely without pecuniary reward for themselves, with an eye single to the development of this handcraft for occupation, profit and development among their neighbors. This keen interest in the correlation of training for head and hand, which is also the keynote of the system of education at Tallulah Falls school that supplies a strong bond between Mrs. Roosevelt and that institution and renders especially appropriate the compliment of Tuesday afternoon from the trustees of Tallulah Falls school to their distinguished guest of honor.

S. A. E. Plans Founder's Day Dinner-Dance

The members of the alumni association of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity and members of the active chapters located at Georgia Tech, Emory University, the University of Georgia and Mercer University will entertain at the annual S. A. E. Founder's Day dinner-dance on Friday evening, March 10, at the Piedmont Driving Club. The occasion, which will be among the most brilliant events featuring the spring social calendar, will celebrate the seventy-seventh anniversary of the founding of the fraternity at the University of Alabama on March 9, 1856.

Arrangements for the dinner-dance are being made by the officers of the Atlanta Alumni Association, who are Henry D. Morgan, president; Edwin L. Sterne, vice president; Robert Ashcraft, secretary and treasurer, and George R. Walsh, assistant secretary and treasurer.

In addition to the Atlanta alumni and the members of the four active chapters, alumni from a number of other cities in Georgia and neighboring states will attend.

Mr., Mrs. Richardson Celebrate Anniversary

Though Mr. and Mrs. Everard Richardson Jr. were in the midst of plans for moving yesterday, they could not bare to forego the pleasures of a celebration of some kind, for the date marked their first wedding anniversary. Just one year ago last evening fashionable Atlanta society gathered at the First Presbyterian church on Peachtree to witness the brilliant nuptial service which made the lovely Miss Catherine Norcross the bride of Mr. Richardson.

This beloved young couple will establish a temporary residence on Monday with their parents, Dr. and Mrs. Everard D. Richardson, at their home on Fifteenth street, pending the completion of their attractive new home, which is under construction in Haynes Manor.

But moving plans were sidetracked for the time being, and an impromptu celebration arranged to take place at the apartment they were about to vacate on Peachtree street. As many of the members of their wedding party as could be reached were extended invitations to tea. Included in the number were Mr. and Mrs. Harry Holland, Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Orr, Mr. and Mrs. Stanton Pickens, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cooper Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Quillian, Misses Lena Knox, Ruth Norris, Frances Barnett, Palmer Dallis, and Jack Tway, J. P. Allen Jr., William Beauchamp, Tom Cassels and Leonard Richardson.

dance be a fox trot, tango, or a dreamy waltz, he is equally at home in the intricate steps.

Though extremely modern and up-to-date in his ideas, especially as concerns the ruling of his state, the governor readily professes his fondness for old-fashioned tunes. His beloved favorite, he says, is "When You and I Were Young, Maggie."

Atlantans Leave On Fascinating Cruise.

A congenial quartet, including Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tull, Mrs. Ida Clarkson Jones, of Little Switzerland, N. C., and Mrs. Elizabeth Fowler, of Charlotte, N. C., embarked the past week for a cruise in southern waters. Boarding a liner of the Great White fleet at New Orleans, they left for a perfectly fascinating trip, stopping at cities rich in age-old tradition. Enchanting glimpses of the old civillzation await them in Panama. Through the canal they will journey and will stop at Balboa, where dwells the governor and the high dignataries of the zone. The street with the most patriotic name, called the Fourth of July avenue, will be traversed by the travelers in search of old Panama scenes.

Boarding a plane, they will view the entire zone from the air, and the glimpse of the huge canal with its locks where the ships of the world seek passage, the bordering shores dotted with buildings, the army post, flag fluttering from the flagstaff, and the gay-colored tropical growth, form an impressive whole. They will visit Havana, where the old civilization is so perfectly combined with the modern, and Tela will also be a port of call. In February, the liner with the Atlantans and their party aboard will turn homeward and they will land in New Orleans and entrain for home. Mrs. Jones, the gracious aunt of Mrs. Tull, and her niece, Mrs. Fowler, will visit Mr. and Mrs. Tull before leaving for North Carolina.

Miss Huff Owns Century-Old Book.

A little book, whose brocaded binding has been touched with age, is numbered among the treasured possessions of Miss Sarah Huff, gracious chatelaine of Huff House, one of Atlanta's most historical dwellings. She is the historian of the Atlanta Pioneer Society, and on May 9 will celebrate her 77th birthday. The book was the property of Miss Huff's mother, the late Mrs. J. Clayton Huff, and bears on the first page of this century-old work the inscription, "Elizabeth Mathilda Independence America Norton, Musick Book, 1833." Covered in rich brocade by the late Mrs. Sara Brandford Norton, grandmother of Miss Huff, the book contains the musical score and verses written by the late Silas Mercer Norton for their little daughter, who was Miss Huff's mother.

The owner of the book attended church services in Athens, Ga., where she lived with her parents, and faithfully followed the musical score and words of familiar songs written in her music book. She lived up to the name given her by her French grandmother, Celia Agee, who, having found life in her own country so filled with religious persecution, fled to Virginia. She so loved the independence of her adopted country that upon journeying to Athens to welcome her little granddaughter, she showed her appreciation of America by naming her "Elizabeth Mathilda Independence America."

Mrs. A. E. Deadwyler Celebrates Birthday.

The privilege is granted to very few to celebrate their 99th birthday, but the opportunity was bestowed upon Mrs. Adeline Eberhart Deadwyler, of Elberton, who, on January 13, received the felicitations of her legion of friends on her 99th birthday. She resides in a colonial mansion in Elberton, and is a charter member of the Sorosis Club, the first chartered club for women organized in the state. Mrs. Deadwyler enjoys splendid health, is keenly interested in current events, and gives generously of her time and means to every worth-while cause. She was born in Madison county, and is a daughter of the late Jacob and Elizabeth Winn Eberhardt, beloved pioneers of that section of Georgia.

She was one of 11 children, and is the only living member of her immediate family. She married Dr. Milton Pope Deadwyler in 1852, and they lived in Danielsville until they moved to Elberton, where Mrs. Deadwyler has lived for over 75 years. Dr. and Mrs. Deadwyler were charter members of the First Baptist church, which was built in Elberton in 1860, and Mrs. Deadwyler is the only living charter member of the church. When the present handsome edifice was erected she contribtued more than half of the funds to erect the building as a memorial to her late husband. Exquisite stained-glass windows, bearing likenesses of these benefactors, adorn the church. Atlanta relatives of Mrs. Deadwyler include Mrs. F. C. Cole, Miss Gussie Eberhardt, J. L. Eberhardt and R. W. Eberhardt.

Miss Mary Will Buff Weds Dr. Morgan in Waycross, Ga.

Mrs. Calvin Morgan, who before her marriage yesterday to Dr. Calvin Morgan, of Johnson City, Tenn., was Miss Mary Will Buff, of Waycross. Mrs. Morgan is a niece of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Greene Coleman, of Waycross, and Colonel and Mrs. A. B. Browman, of Johnson City, Tenn.

WAYCROSS, Ga., Jan. 28.—The marriage of Miss Mary Will Buff, of this city, to Dr. Calvin Vere Morgan, of Johnson City, Tenn., took place at a beautiful home wedding Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock, January 28, at the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Greene Coleman, on Satilla boulevard, Cherokee Heights.

The ring ceremony was impressively performed by Rev. J. M. Outler, pastor of the First Methodist church, in the presence of only the immediate family.

The bride was lovely in a two-piece suit of beige rib sheer crepe with brown and white figured blouse, worn with brown accessories. Her shoulder bouquet was of Talisman roses and valley lilies.

Mrs. Morgan, an attractive young woman, is possessed of gracious charm as well as rare intellectual attributes. She has made her home in Waycross with Mr. and Mrs. Coleman for several years and is admired by a wide circle of friends. Mrs. Morgan is also a niece of Colonel and Mrs. A. B. Browman, of Johnson City, Tenn.

Dr. Morgan, a representative of a well-known Tennessee family, is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Morgan, of Johnson City. He is a prominent dentist in that city and has held several offices in the district and state dental society of Tennessee. He was graduated from Vanderbilt University, where he was a member of the Delta Sigma Delta dental fraternity and the Omicron Kappa Upsilon honorary fraternity.

Following the ceremony Dr. Morgan and his bride left for a wedding trip in Florida and Cuba, after which they will be at home in Johnson City.

Atlanta Schoolgirls Attend College Dances.

Popular belles among the group of Atlanta girls away at college or boarding school are enthusiastically planning new wardrobes and obtaining permissions from their respective schools in anticipation of the gala midwinter dances at which a number of them will be attractive figures. A trio of lovely young Atlantans, Misses Dorothy Brumby, Helen Parker and Virginia Dillon, who are students at Hollins College, Va., will be among the sought-after dancers at the midwinter dance series at the near-by Virginia Military Academy at Lexington, Va. The V. M. I. dances are particularly colorful due to the effective contrast of the military uniforms worn by the cadets with the delicately-tinted evening gowns of the girls. Special features of these dances are the striking figures participated in by members of the various classes and led by the officers.

Blonde Miss Rosemary Townley, beautiful young daughter of Mrs. John M. Townley, and a student at the exclusive Ogontz school near Philadelphia, Pa., is planning an especially exciting round of collegiate dances, where she will be the guest of young Atlantans who are students at these institutions. Next week-end Miss Townley will attend the brilliant ice carnival at Williams College, Williamstown, Mass., where winter sports will vie for prominence with the festive balls in the evening and tea-dances. This southern belle will be numbered among the popular figures on the dance floor at the mid-winter festivities at Lehigh University the week-end of February 11, and at a later date will attend a series of dances at Princeton University at Princeton, N. J.

Numbered among the most charming of the schoolgirls is Miss Octavia Riley, the daughter of Mrs. James L. Riley, who is a student at Finch school, New York city. Miss Riley is spending this week-end at Annapolis, Md., where she will attend the winter hops of the United States Naval Academy. A special flavor is added to these affairs, which feature many unique numbers to which special significance is attached because they have been used by the midshipmen for many years.

Although she is not among the schoolgirls, Miss Annabel Hanbel Hancock, an attractive member of the younger set, represented Atlanta at the brilliant traditional fancy dress ball at Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., which took place last evening. Miss Hancock was a striking figure in her soldier's costume, fashioned with a bright, crimson jacket, white trousers, and a snappy military hat worn at a jaunty angle. A novel atmosphere not usually associated with the quiet colonial surroundings of Washington and Lee University was created when students of the university and their guests held the annual dances.

Seventeenth cetury Spanish was the central, governing theme of the social round, which was climaxed by the colorful fancy dress ball.

Miss Hancock is visiting Mrs. E. D. Heins in Roanoke, Va., and will also visit in Washington, D. C., before returning to Atlanta March 1.

Lane-Finch Rites Performed In China.

A service romance with a fair member of the army nurse corps portraying the role of the bride and an attractive army officer cast as the bridegroom was culminated in far away China when Miss Opal Clair Lane, of Tulsa, Okla., and Ralph Finch, lieutenant of infantry, were married at an interesting ceremony. The wedding, which was solmenized at the Tathay hotel in Shanghai, in late May, was attended by a group of the military set and the regimental chaplain, T. K. Jones, of the Thirty-first infantry, performed the ceremony.

The bride had as her maid of honor, Miss Ruby Mason, a second lieutenant of the nurse corps, and the best man was Lieutenant Lewis Riggins, U. S. A., and a brother officer of the bridegroom in the Thirty-first infantry. Lieutenant Henry Bailey was groomsman and the engagement and wedding was announced by Colonel Lorenzo Gasser, U. S. A., commanding officer of the Thirty-first infantry, and Mrs. Gasser.

Mrs. Finch is a graduate of St. Mary's Academy at Fort Smith, Ark., and is a popular member of service circles. Her husband is a graudate of the Indian River Academy and an honor graduate of the University of Indiana. He was stationed in China and the Philippines and upon his return to the States was accompanied by his bride. After a leave spent on the mainland they came to Fort McPherson for station, where Lieutenant Finch is on duty with the Twenty-second infantry, in command of the transportation platoon of the service company. Both he and Mrs. Finch are delightful additions to the younger contingent of the post and civilian social circles.

Dr. and Mrs. Riley Journey to Nassau.

Nassau, the picturesque possession of Great Britain in the Bahamas was the objective of Dr. and Mrs. Julian Riley when they journeyed southward. They flew to Nassau by airplane from Miami, making the trip in two hours, and Irving Berlin, the famous song wrtier, was among the passengers in the plane accommodating 22 passengers, all bound for Nassau, the little city which is now well into its third century.

Dr. and Mrs. Riley were domiciled at the Royal Victoria hotel, which is not far distant from the famous Paradise beach, where they acquired a becoming sun tan, and enjoyed swimming in the glorious blue and green waters. The balmy climate and the beauty of the scenery proved attractive to these Atlantans, and they feasted their eyes upon the flaming bougianvillea and the gorgeous hibiscus blossoms growing in profusion all over the city.

Dr. and Mrs. Riley enjoyed the privileges of "The Jungle Club," a unique cabaret club which is a favorite resort of the fashionables visiting Nassau during the winter season. They renewed their friendship with Mrs. William Paley, who, as the former Dorothy Hearst, was a resident of Atlanta, and who is the charming chatelaine of a winter home in Nassau. At the duration of their enjoyable stay in Nassau, Dr. and Mrs. Riley boarded an airplane headed for the United States and completed the two-hour crossing in time to have dinner in Miami.

Mrs. Alston Visits Chateau at Sapelo.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Alston are enjoying a winter vacation at The Cloister, Sea Island Beach, Ga. Mrs. Alston, who is a member of the duBignon family that formerly owned lekyll island and a portion of Sapelo, is finding many points of interest on the coast that were linked with her forbears. Poullain duBignon, with four other members of the French nobility—DeMouesse, de Chapeldelaine, Grand de Marlee and Jean de Boisfillet—fleeing the French revolution, by an agreement at San Malo in 1790 set up at Sapelo a communal ownership. Remains of the French chateau still remain on the island, Mrs. Alston's forbears, the duBignons, having chosen the beautiful south end, where Howard Coffin's home now stands under the great oaks.

These French families introduced into this country many formalities of the French court, such as the use of visiting cards, and stories remain of these quaint figures with broad-skirted coats, embroidered vests and knee breeches, leading a pig around on a leash in an earnest search for that French delicacy, truffles, and sighing as they searched, "Mon dieu, I would that we may find them, for the eating of them makes men more gentle and women more tender, and in this country we need them, mon dieu, mon dieu."

Debutantes of 1932-33

Sketched By Cleo Mansfield

Miss Emily Walker, lovely second daughter of Mrs. Pressley Walker, is an admired member of the debutante set and is among the debs who are provisional members of the Junior League. Miss Walker made her formal bow with her close friend, Miss Teresa Hanger, at the breakfast at which Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Herbert Hanger entertained at the home of Mrs. Walker. A particularly graceful dancer, possessing an erect bearing and an air of distinction, Miss Walker is an outstanding figure at any gathering at which she is present. Membership Chairman Makes Appeal For Henrietta Egleston Hospital

Mrs. Robert B. Pegram, chairman of membership for the woman's auxiliary of the Henrietta Egleston hospital, makes an appeal for this worthy institution in the following article, in which she outlines the various kinds of membership and its support:

"The woman's auxiliary of the Children's hospital is asking the continued support and co-operation of all its members. The income derived from the membership dues is one of our chief means of maintenance and supplies to the hospital all linen, helps with the repairs and replacing of equipment. The hospital endowment is expended entirely on the care of charity patients.

"The income of the hospital, like that of all organizations, has been curtailed at this time. No contribution is made to the hospital by Fulton county or Community Chest and the hospital cares for the children of the state, county and city, especially those not eligible for other free hospitals.

"The hospital is caring for about 1,200 children per year. It is one of the best equipped hospitals in this country, but is in need of funds and assistance.

"The meetings of the Egleston hospital auxiliary are held at the nurses' home on the third Monday of each month at 3 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended you to attend these meetings and work on one of the committees, or be a contributing member only.

"This is what your money will do: $1 will make you a member of the auxiliary and will keep a sick baby in a special formula 24 hours; $5 will make you a sustaining member of the auxiliary and will keep a sick baby in milk (special formula) one week; $10 will pay hospital expenses for the removal of a child's tonsils and will pay for the oxygen tent for one week for a pneumonia case; $25 will equip a bassinet and maintain premature room for a week; $50 will keep the hospital stock of antitoxin and serum; $100 will make you a life member of the auxiliary, will keep a sick child in the hospital for a month and will pay salary and maintenance of a nurse for a month; $350 will provide added needed equipment for the X-ray room; $1,000 will maintain a child's bed for a year, and $15,000 will be a perpetual endowment for a memorial bed."

Girl Scout Troops Plan Stunt Night.

Among the activities at the Jewish Educational Alliance are the four Girl Scout troops, embracing a membership of 100 girls. Mrs. Irving H. Goldstein is captain of Troop No. 4, with Miss Lillian Weintraub as assistant; Mrs. John Smith is captain of Troop No. 8, with Miss Evelyn Blumberg as assistant, and Miss Helen Seff, girl's worker at the Center, is leader of Troops 3 and 6.

In addition to the weekly meetings held by each group, which includes test work, games, singing, dramatics, etc., outdoor life consisting of hikes and summer camping occupy a prominent place in the program. Each summer these troops spend the month of August at Camp Civitania—the Girl Scout camp—swimming, hiking, outdoor cooking, woodcraft, dancing, dramatics, singing, etc.

In order to assist in getting outdoor playground equipment, these groups are presenting a Girl Scout stunt night on February 3, at which time each troop will present their stunt, competing with the others. Among stunts to be presented are "A Modernized Version of Red Riding Hood," "Girl Scouts Through Television," "Radioland Celebrities," etc. All friends of these troops and Girl Scouts are invited to attend.

Mrs. Cooney Talks On Southern Gardens.

Mrs. Robert L. Cooney gave a lecture on southern gardens to members of the Lullwater Garden Club at a meeting of this organization last Friday at the home of Mrs. Thomas Conner in Druid Hills.

Colored slides were used to illustrate this delightful talk and members were inspired to make their own gardens more distinctively southern with planting of boxwood, azaleas, cape jasmines, dogwood, magnolia and myrtle.

During the business session of the meeting the members answered the Garden Club of Georgia questionnaire for 1933. The president announced a small flower show to be held at the February meeting. Plants for winter house decorations, including tulips, hyacinths, lily of the valley, tube roses, ivy, pansies, etc., will be displayed.

Mrs. J. E. Dickey poured tea and Mesdames Thomas Connor, Grady Estes and Olin S. Cofer were assisting hostesses.

AN AMERICAN NOVEL.
Selected by the Literary Guild for January.

Never Ask the End. By Isabel Patterson. This last story by a well-known author is so entertaining, so well written that it is one of the two books, it is said, that Sinclair Lewis is talking about to every newspaperman he meets—he thinks "it introduces Mrs. Patterson to the real ranks of really important novelists." And Anne Parish says that it is really a beautiful book, "honest, penetrating and witty." And even Ruth Raphael, who can tell a clever book from the outside covers, or who is ever ready to praise a worth-while romance, regardless of the author, says it's fine.

And now for an outline of the story, which is woven around three Americans—Pauline, beautiful but sensitive; Marta, clever and witty, a characteristic that always appeals to her men friends, and Russell, sober-thinking, practical and well known as an idealist—they meet again in the city of cities, where Paris styles and Paris ways keep one busy and wide awake. Once upon a time these three were a trio of good friends and, naturally, they were drawn together again by the old bond of friendship—and in this reunion they realized that they had found something else—love, jealousy, joy and pain. The same old subjects that have caused trouble in New York as well as in Paris. Some critic says the story is "like an arresting double exposure—one exposure the past, one the present, and all ending like a picture book—turn the pages and the pictures tell the story."

"Never Ask the End" is content to use the method of life. The author lets the characters talk and act and in doing this you soon learn their disposition and characteristics.

Someone asked the author her age. She replied, "Wars have been fought and governments overturned to find out my age"—it's nobody's business, but it is the business of the literary world to say that she is a clever writer of modern American novel. (William Morrow & Co., New York.)

ISABEL PATTERSON.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.
High Low Washington. By 30 32. This is the story:

Two writers of unique experience both in Europe and America, here present the last word on the national capital. They unmask frenzied financing a la Kreuger, the Hoover and Roosevelt myths, the whispers that go the rounds, the radio trust, and every event of current interest.

The man who is on the national stage will be interested in this book, for the authors of "High Low Washington" have fearlessly turned the spotlight and the floodlight on the congressmen and the senators, and even visitors who are in Washington for pleasure or profit have come in for their share.

The volume is an interesting analysis of the doings of the national and international "affairs." It can also be said that the women are not left out in the work of this searchlight. The Washington Sounding Board is becoming quite popular all over the country. (J. B. Lippincott Co.)

A TRAVEL STORY.
Keep Moving. By Alfred C. B. Fletcher. The title of this volume was the short advice given to the author by a friend who was an inveterate traveler, and taking his advice, Mr. Fletcher decided that he would give the public the result of the benefit of this advice.

The author's definition of "Keep Moving" is "the enthusiasm of youth and joy in things foreign with a whimsical, kindly tolerance of each oddity." Now this is the writer's advice: "Select the most lovable chap you know; encourage him to travel over the roads described in this book, equip him with the charm of the natural story teller; add a wealth of human understanding and love of humor—and the story he writes will be a duplicate of Mr. Fletcher's experience. Here is a story of a trip around the world where the author found many interesting by-paths, of which he tells in a whimsical style that will appeal to the young and the old alike.

The decorations by Gregory Orloff tell the story in illustrations with attractive woodcuts that appeal so earnestly to the reader. The first, "Outward Bound from New York Harbor" is the beginning of the story in pictures and the last can well be imagined, for after a trip abroad, what is more appealing to the eye and to the heart than the Statue of Liberty. After eight years on the by-paths in a trip around the world, the writer landed home only to realize that many changes had taken place—"many" changes over the land over which Liberty keeps a protecting hand." (Laidlaw Brothers.)

CAMP LIFE IN INDIA.
The Secret Valley. By Mrs. Hobart-Hampden. Author of "The Hidden City." Illustrated with color jacket. This is an interesting story in which all lovers of camping will enjoy, that is, the Boy Scouts and the Camp Fire Girls. The story is woven most interestingly around a boy and a girl—Joan and Ralph, whose parents, though English, lived in India. During the summer the family camped in the very heart of an Indian forest—on the side of the Himalayan mountain—but there was not a lonely day and then there were long rides on a gray elephant which they called Moti.

All that, of course, is quite interesting to boys and girls, but listen to this: The mahout, who had captured Moti and trained her, told Joan and Ralph about the secret valley, and why it was called that, so one day they started on their adventures and really found more than they anticipated, for they had quite an exciting surprise. (L. C. Page & Co., Boston.)

THE SURGE AND THUNDER.
When an author devotes more than 600 pages to the subject of civilization and culture, after writing a book on "The Road to Culture," it is the consensus of opinion that he is a deep student of that subject and a most earnest American. The following comment on Dr. Shaw's work is unusual: "There is not a cobweb, nor a fleck of dust on the amazing array of historical facts presented in this fascinating book."

Dr. Shaw tells a most interesting story of the long journey that mankind has taken since the beginning, and why it has been found refreshing and stimulating. As the reader well knows many books have been written on the result of the study of some member of mankind as far back as the very beginning, but the author has been perhaps more careful as to the substance of his words, what he puts in and what he leaves out, so the reader will enjoy the writer's clear, concise and yet frank and earnest comment, even though he may show more optimism than the average writer. Someone says "he fits into our modern American life and he brings the reader down through the heritage of the years into a world which is constantly growing better."

Dr. Shaw realized in the beginning that he had a problem on his hands, but like a man and a scholar he made preparation for the story he so interestingly tells and in which modern youth, progressive middle age and even the ripe years of three score and ten will find it a pleasant story to read and to remember. (The Baker & Taylor Co., New York.)

SOCIOLOGY.
Introduction to Sociology. By Ernest R. Groves, research professor of social science in the University of North Carolina. New revised edition. In more than 700 pages the writer discusses most interestingly a subject that has become one of the livest of this day, and for this reason he decided to add a few new contributions and to emphasize the importance of including them in the introductory course of study.

Dr. Groves is a well-known student of psychology and his writings have been widely read. The Longman's social science series contains many books of instruction and interest, among them being "Social Problems and Education; Race and Population Problems; the Child and Society." There are also other books in progress which will be added to this series. (Longman's, Green & Co., New York.)

POLAND.
Wings Over Poland. By Kenneth Malcolm Murray. This is the story of the seventh (Kosciuszko) squadron of the Polish air forces. Paderewski says: "May I not be permitted to salute the now historical Kosciuszko escadrille, and to thank its members for their precious assistance, for their valorous deeds, and for their heroism and their friendship."

This is the first published account of that courageous group of American and Polish aviators who banded together at the close of the World War to fight for Poland. The author of this unusual account was himself a member of the squadron. There are a number of interesting incidents woven around the name of a young American flying officer named Cooper. The story is quite interesting, as are its illustrations. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

BOOK ON RUSSIA.
Ding Goes to Russia. By Jay N. Darling, cartoonist. The writer tells in the foreword of the whys and wherefores of his travels in Russia, in which he says, "Once assured that I was not a destructive agent, my days and my travels were absolutely free from any sign of guidance. We went wherever we chose." The map of Ding's travels can be studied by the reader without any mental effort. It is cleverly drawn.

Among the different subjects discussed by Mr. Darling and which are of so much interest not only to the citizens but to the students of the United States is "Understanding the Russian People," "Russia's Youth," "Work for Everybody," "Traveling in Russia" and another subject that is being questioned at the present time and one that will answer the question is under the title "They Still Go To Church." The illustrations are unusually attractive. (Whittlesey House, New York.)

MISCELLANEOUS.
Earth History. By Dr. Luther C. Snider, consulting geologist, and known as a practical thinker. He is a graduate of Indiana University and holds the degree of Ph.D. in geology from the University of Chicago. He has written this authentic history of the earth and of the things that have lived on the earth in a style that will please the reader and the student, for it is free from technical terms. There are over 300 illustrations which will be of assistance in the study of the mysterious past of the earth and its inhabitants. (The Century Co., New York.)

Unmasking Wall Street. By John Lloyd Parker. Everybody is interested in the money that has been made and lost in Wall Street and the security market of the United States. The author has written a book that will be of interest to every investor. It tells of the inside workings of Wall Street. (The Stratford Co., Boston.)

The Revolt of the Masses. By Jose Ortega Y Gassett. Authorized translation from the Spanish. The Wall Street Journal recommends the following four books dealing with the present crisis: "Salter's Recovery." Simond's "Can Europe Keep the Peace?" Lippman & Scraggs' "The United States in World's Affairs," and Ortega's "Revolt of the Masses." (W. W. Norton & Co., New York.)

Riches for All. By H. E. Fryberger. Author of "The Abolition of Poverty." The author of this little book says he is not a dreamer in giving a fearless discussion, non-partisan, of the strength and weakness of President Hoover, President-elect Roosevelt, and of the republican and democratic national platforms. Jacket design by Clare Tate. (Advance Publishing Co., New York.)

The New Crisis in the Far East. By Stanley High. The author, through travel and research work, is quite familiar with conditions there. He tells the story of the present crisis, as he sees it, and there are no dull words used in expressing his opinion. (Reveli's Book, New York.)

Abroad for Licker and Learning. By Milton Rieser. A collection of short stories of the travels of four good Americans, one of whom was a strict member of the church of the old school. He had been commissioned by the Temperance League to investigate the prohibition question abroad. It is an interesting story. (Meador Publishing Co., Boston.)

That Reminds Me! Twelve hundred humorous anecdotes. By J. Gilchrist Lawson. While the material in this book can be called varied, it is carefully arranged and classified under 200 separate topics. Some rainy night you will find it unusually interesting. (Ray Long and Richard R. Smith, New York.)

Horizons. A glimpse into the not far distant future—"a future that will see many, if not all, of our present notions of form cast into the discard—when, through the influence of new design, most of the features of our every-day life will take on new aspects for the greater economy, efficiency, comfort and happiness of our lives." By Norman Bel Geddes. (Little Brown & Co., Boston.)

Life—a story of the old and new south. By Hal du Sante. The author of this book is not a southerner—either of the old south or the new, and yet he was inspired to write a story about the southland in which the hero of the story is a young minister who is transferred to the south and to a community who continue to hold onto the traditions of the old south. (Meador Publishing Co., Boston.)

The CONSTITUTION'S STAMP CORNER

By N. S. Noble

STAMP SKETCHES - NO. 7

More information on Georgia's own Oglethorpe commemorative stamp and how it will be handled is available for Stamp Corner readers this morning, following the brief announcement last Sunday that it had been approved.

General Oglethorpe, from the portrait which probably will be used for the stamp.

Plans being worked out by the conductor of this department with Albert R. Rogers, director of the Georgia bicentennial commission, promise to give cover collectors a nice array of pretty cachets with the new stamp used for postage.

Already the Atlanta Stamp Society, Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce and the Stamp Corner can assure an attractive cachet for Atlanta and another for Oglethorpe University postoffice the day the stamps go on sale in the Atlanta postoffice.

Savannah has been designated the "first day" city and will have an official postoffice department cachet. Addressed covers for this city should be sent to the postmaster with money order for the amount of stamps required for mailing them.

Covers for the Oglethorpe University and Atlanta cancels, on Tuesday, February 14, should be sent to the postmaster, Atlanta, or the Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce, and they will be properly taken care of and mailed on the correct date.

The bicentennial commission has mailed letters to chambers of commerce in 86 Georgia cities suggesting that each city sponsor its own cachet, to be mailed on the date the stamps first go on sale in the city, February 14. This would make a pretty collection in itself. A list of such cities co-operating and to whom to address covers, will be given next Sunday.

POSTAL INSTRUCTIONS.

Following are instructions from the postoffice department on how to obtain "first-day" covers:

"Stamp collectors desiring 'first-day' cancellations of the General Oglethorpe stamp may send a limited number of addressed covers, not to exceed a total of 25, to the postmaster, Savannah, Ga., with a cash or postal money order remittance to exactly cover the value of the stamps required for affixing; other postage stamps positively will not be accepted in payment.

"Covers will be accepted from individual subscribers only, and each cover must be properly and legibly addressed. Special care must be taken in addressing covers to bear blocks of stamps to allow sufficient clear space for the attaching of stamps. Compliance cannot be made with unusual requests, such as for the affixing of stamps bearing plate numbers or unusual placing of the stamps on covers, etc. Requests for a supply of uncancelled stamps must not be included with orders for first day covers. Uncancelled stamps of the new commemorative issue desired for collection purposes may be obtained from the philatelic agency, postoffice department."

OGLETHORPE CACHETS.

With Savannah "first day" and Atlanta and Oglethorpe University already in thelist of "second day" cities, and more to come, collectors will celebrate an Oglethorpe jubilee when the new stamp first comes out.

Collectors wishing their own printed envelopes may obtain them from Linnprint, publishers of Linn's Weekly Stamp News. More details are given in their advertisement in the Stamp Mart in this column. The envelopes will make pretty covers for the Oglethorpe celebration. They are printed in two colors and include the great seal of the state.

A specially printed cover, showing the seal of the city of Savannah and appropriate wording in two colors, will be supplied by Ben Cooper, who has an advertisement in the Stamp Mart today in this column. Many cover collectors like to prepare their own envelopes and these printed designs will enable them to have a pretty and different cover for this big event.

The conductor of this department also will mail covers and prepare covers for collectors with an Oglethorpe cachet from Atlanta and Oglethorpe University on the proper dates. These all will be personally affixed and those wishing them autographed by the editor or the artist may have them that way. See the Stamp Mart for additional information. The cachet for these covers will have for the central design a likeness of Oglethorpe, which probably will be from the same portrait used for making the stamp, which will give collectors an unusual and unique cover.

State Education Chairman Issues Message to Federated Women

Mrs. L. H. Browning, of Cochran, state chairman of education for Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, sends message to clubwomen as follows: "To my local chairmen goes my personal recognition. I know how much depends upon your unremitting zeal and sympathetic understanding. The crisis which education faces this year offers a challenge to the lofty idealism of the clubwomen of the nation. Enemies are taking advantage of the present economic situation to undermine the faith of the public in the value of education. Let every clubwomen follow Benjamin Franklin's slogan during Revolutionary days, 'Unite or Perish' and unite our forces that education may continue its victorious advance, giving every child in the nation equal opportunity.

"Through our division of public instruction, responses show that the clubwomen are giving generously of their time and substance in supplying morning milk and hot lunches for undernourished children, making gifts of clothing, shoes and books to the needy, providing playground equipment and helping maintain trade and evening schools. Our women are aware of the menace in lowering school standards and realize that money invested in education yields the best dividends.

Adult Education.

"Our adult education is one of the problems of the day. Everywhere the aim is to fit the adult to meet his share of responsibility. There are a hundred ways to carry this forward, but the object is always the same. Some suggestions are that the radio can be made more useful and that more open forums be held where these problems are discussed. The committee on pre-school and kindergartens has been carrying a precious cargo. 'The right start in life for every child.' The school and community in general profits from the kindergarten. Primary education has been transformed. The attitude of the world toward childhood and motherhood has taken on new and higher significance. The kindergarten renders an important service to the home. Experiment by an Atlanta teacher showed that 10 per cent of non-promotion of children in her own first grade with kindergarten training was 9.1 compared with 53.3 of pupils without kindergarten training. As the result of a tour being made in the interest of this work, we hope to have a kindergarten in every school.

"Your chairman would like to stimulate interest in loan and gift scholarships. Hundreds of beneficiaries of these funds have succeeded. Bring the facts before your clubs in education programs. Questions suggested are: Why maintain a state federation scholarship and loan fund? When did your federation create this fund, and how financed? How administered? Give number of boys and girls assisted? After school, what?

Library Extension.

"Each library chairman believes her department or division most important, and I am sure your chairman of library extension will say that she knows her division is the most important. The story is told of the Columbia University professor who remarked after observing what his fellow travelers in the subway were reading, 'I wonder if we are doing right in working to decrease illiteracy?' Our schools teach the population to read, it is up to the libraries to provide reading material which makes life worthwhile. Our objective, adopted by the federation, 'A free library in every county' will be a wonderful accomplishment. If spectacular things cannot be accomplished right now, remarkable results will be obtained if we work steadiiy, each club trying to do its best to help some library.

"Since the modern generation lives on the road, home being used only as a place to 'refill and retire,' roadside beautification should be emphasihzed. Roads should be widened before planting is done. One state has planted 80,000 trees in the past few months. In their campaign against billboards, states have adopted the slogan, 'We favor candidates who do not believe in advertising on the landscape.' Last but not least is our garden division. What a cargo of beauty and loveliness is brought to us everywhere now through the garden activities. Remember joys are never past and the fragrance of these gardens will linger with us. The educational line has held admirably. The zero hour is at hand. Let us launch a vigorous drive and as Marshal Foch said, 'When faced with defeat, attack!' American education will win for it is founded upon a rock."

Mrs. Griffeth Defines Meaning And Aim of Mothercraft Division

Mrs. R. C. Griffeth, state chairman of mothercraft of Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, issues a message to the clubwomen on "Mothercraft," which literally means skill in motherhood and is a definite and precise course of instruction for school girls in personal hygiene, home sanitation and the care of babies, having for its deep purpose the instilling into the hearts and minds of these girls the exquisite beauty and sanctity of the home. Through mothercraft the child of the next generation will be assured of mother love guided by trained intelligence and scientifically right principles.

Because mothercraft reaches girls during their formative years, it offers a splendid opportunity to establish those habits of life that make for health and consequent happiness and usefulness. Although mothercraft is practically a new department in the federation the principle is not new. One is astonished to learn that Florence Nightingale said, more than 100 years ago, that she was certain that instruction in the care of babies should be a part of the school work of every girl. Many others have said this also, but never until the establishment of mothercraft in Massachusetts has a definite and pedagogically correct plan of instruction made it possible for school officials to find a place for mothercraft in the school curriculum.

High Aim.

It is the high aim of this division to make every possible effort to introduce a short course in mothercraft in every school in the state that does not have a home economics department. Since nearly all states permit children to go to work before they are 16, the need for training in motherhood in schools is evident. Many future mothers at the age of development are employed in industry.

The mothercraft textbook, "Children Well and Happy," has been prepared by May Dickinson Kimball, registered nurse, who has had the assistance of foremost medical and educational authorities. This little book is a gem of information cleverly and delicately presented and is especially recommended for use in girls' summer camps. Girl Scouts have already made use of it and found it exceedingly helpful. Many mothers and teachers are forming groups dedicated to the study of topics that concern childhood. For the use of such groups bibliographies have been prepared by the general federation chairman and will be mailed out upon request to General Federation Headquarters, Washington, D. C.

This department has chosen for its project this year, putting on demonstrations in "infant care" in all schools not so fortuntae as to have a course in home economics. Chairmen are stressing the need of this work in isolated rural schools, making an effort to favor such schools when discriminations occur. There are yet a few district presidents who have not sent in names of mothercraft chairmen. Please send your appointments to your state chairman, who has interesting literature to be mailed out. Also, it would be of great encouragement to district mothercraft chairmen if the clubs would have a chairman of this division, in order that the line may be perfect.

Mrs. Poole's Tribute.

Most appropriate is the tribute to mothercraft by Grace Morrison Poole: "Mothercraft, the supreme craftsmanship of the world, the building of a human race worthy to carry on the building of the world. Modern inventions can never replace it for it is a craftsmanship of the soul as well as of the hand and mind and fortunate indeed is the child who is privileged to study mothercraft."

Madison County Federation Formed

In response to an invitation from Danielsville Woman's Club, Mrs. J. W. Gholston, president Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. W. W. Armistead, president tenth district, and Mrs. C. B. Ayers, chairman publicity tenth district, were guests at the January meeting, when Mrs. C. B. Ayers presented plans for a county federation to enable rural women to co-operate more efficiently in the worthwhile development of Madison county, and as a gesture of pride in their own Mrs. Gholston, whose home is in the county.

After discussion, the Danielsville club voted to sponsor this movement and Mrs. W. D. Graham, president, called a conference of representatives from all the county clubs to meet in Danielsville January 19. Eighteen women were present and after expressions of enthusiasm, a unanimous vote was given for a Madison county federation.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. R. C. Griffith, Danielsville; first vice president, Mrs. H. H. Hampton, Colbert; second vice president, Mrs. H. J. Whitehead, Comer, recording secretary, Mrs. H. G. Bannister, Ila; corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. D. Graham, Danielsville; treasurer, Mrs. Howard Long, Carlton; parliamentarian, Mrs. Elmer Smith, Diamond Hill; chaplain, Mrs. Quilla Massey, Hull. Committee on constitution and by-laws: Mesdames W. A. Rowe, H. H. Hart and H. G. Bannister. Committee on publicity will be the secretary and Mrs. C. B. Ayers. First meeting of the federation will be in Comer, guest of the Comer Woman's Club. There will be a membership campaign and every woman in the county will be invited to join.

Warm Springs Club Extends Greetings.

At the January meeting the Warm Springs Woman's Club, through its individual members, extended New Year greetings to President-elect and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt as an interesting feature of the program. It was a great pleasure to express appreciation of these distinguished people, regarded as friends and neighbors, and to wish for them success and happiness, not only for this, but for all succeeding years. Mrs. Roosevelt has been a valued member for a number of years, an honor the clubwomen deeply appreciate.

Executive Board Meets Feb. 16.

The executive board of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs will meet in executive session Thursday morning, February 16, at 9:30 o'clock, in the Henry Grady hotel, Atlanta. Luncheon will be served there following the morning session. The resignation of Mrs. W. B. Smith, of Tennille, first vice president, was tendered in October and her successor will be elected at this board meeting. On February 15, Mrs. John K. Ottley, president, calls a meeting of the board of trustees of Tallulah Falls school, from 4 to 10 p. m., at the Henry Grady hotel.

MRS. J. W. GHOLSTON,
President, G. F. W. C.

Nominating Committee For Millen Club.

Mrs. A. H. Sparks is chairman of the nominating committee of Millen Woman's Club, and serving on her committee are Mesdames G. C. Dekle, J. F. Oats, F. S. Boyer and C. B. Landrum. The ticket will be posted for a month and then voted on at the March meeting. Mrs. Charlie Reeves, the president, named the committee at the meeting held at the community room.

The treasurer, Mrs. Henry Lewis, reported that $25 had been given during the month to the Jenkins county health unit for special tuberculosis clinic work. Dr. G. C. Lunsford, health commisisoner, wrote a letter of gratitude to the club for this and other assistance given to him and his association.

Music committee of which Mrs. C. Thompson is chairman, reported that an evening's entertainment of selections from Goethe's "Faust" is planned for the spring music program.

Mrs. Hendricks Brinson, librarian, reported having catalogued 16 new books during the month and that the circulation for December, 1932, was an increase of 400 over the December, 1931, circulation. The annual report to the Georgia library commission has been forwarded to Atlanta.

Mrs. Reeves, Mesdames C. Thompson, Hendricks Brinson and S. C. Parker were social hour nostesses.

All-Georgia Program Suggestions Made By Committee

Through the publicity given the all-Georgia program that will be carried on during this bicentennial year, there is an opportunity for every citizen to become acquainted with his state, to know Georgia and make Georgia known to the nation. Unless this is done, Georgians will not know the glories of our state and we cannot tell others about them intelligently. Those desiring may learn of Georgia events, resources and advantages, and perpetuate the history, ideals and traditions of Georgia in the building of the nation.

Many requests for suggestions for participation by organizations in the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the founding of Georgia come to the state committee, Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Howard McCall and Mrs. Harvie Jordan, co-chairmen. The following is a suggested outline: Fitting introduction to the formal opening of the Georgia bicentennial celebration will be a service of tribute to the founders of the state in churches on Georgia Day on February 12. Urge that this be done in every community.

Appoint and assist the Georgia bicentennial committee in the county in every way possible in making and carrying out its plans for the county's celebration during the nine months. Announce the plans of organization for participation in the celebration at an early date, and impress upon members their individual responsibility in making the statewide celebration a success.

See that public libraries, especially the small town and county traveling libraries, are well supplied with authentic books on Georgia for readers of all ages. Confer with school authorities and assist in making the statewide series of educational contests a success. Use Georgia programs and the historical program papers in your study courses and at your meetings. Give a reception, ball or tea at which colonial costumes are worn. Arrange popular programs with a play, pageant or tableaux with colonial music. Plant trees with appropriate ceremony in honor of Georgia's heroes and statesmen, and report them to your bicentennial committee through state federation headquarters in Henry Grady hotel in Atlanta.

Home Accident Survey

That all clubs participate in the home accident survey during February is urged by Mrs. John Braselton, chairman of safety in home and school, Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs. "Should everyone practice the slogan of this movement, 'Take time to be safe,' a vast number of lives and untold suffering would be avoided. Deaths from home accidents are almost as numerous as from vehicle accidents, to say nothing of permanent injuries. Yet few people realize the tremendous hazards of the home," writes Mrs. Braselton.

"Tabulation of home injuries for even a single month will localize accident figures and help to convince the community of the importance of home safety, thereby making the home a safer place for home-makers and home visitors. The interest and enthusiasm of each district chairman of safety in the home is urged with the hope that this movement will be sponsored in each district. Chairmen may have as many copies of the home injury report sheet as they need, upon application to the state chairman. Please ask for them. This is the first real endeavor of this division of federation work and the month assigned is February please co-operate and report to your state chairman."

Mrs. A. B. Conger, of Bainbridge, president of second district of Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, attended the January meeting of Camilla Woman's Club and outlined the federation's objectives. She discussed the important part that women's clubs play in molding good opinion and in training for good citizenship. Mrs. J. B. Butler, program chairman, introduced Mrs. Conger. Mrs. L. D. Shealy reported that $28 was realized from the sale of Red Cross seals. Of this amount $17.25, the club's part, will be used for the prevention of tuberculosis in Mitchell county. Mrs. J. W. Butler reported work done in the city park spots during the past month. Mrs. D. D. Burgess, the club president, told of a prominent citizen seeking to enlist the interest of the club members toward securing a public library for Camilla. Club has sponsored the school library and has been actively interested in its work.

A letter from Mrs. H. H. Perry, of Albany, requested that the club sponsor a musicale by her glee club. The club voted to invite Mrs. Perry and the fine arts and finance committees asked to make plans for the entertainment.

Mrs. C. E. Gaulden rendered a piano solo, Virginia Thompkins gave a reading, Mrs. Julian Rivers played a piano selection. The hostesses were Mesdames G. J. Joiner, W. C. Adams, A. I. Bennett and Fort Barker.

Mrs. Homer Williams, president of Thomasville Study class, presided at the last meeting, and Mrs. Albert Brandon, literary chairman for January, presented Mrs. Harry Ainsworth, who read an interesting account of the relations existing between Poland and Germany today, Poland being one of the countries of central Europe selected for study.

Mussolini's policies and methods as discussed by Mrs. Will Watt in her paper, "Mussolini Is the State," pictured the great Italian leader as a statesman and idealist, his wonderful success being based on his understanding of the psychology of the masses.

Poems were read by Mrs. Homer Williams, including "Renascence," by Edna St. Vincent Millay; "The Glory of the Garden," by Rudyard Kipling; "The Lost Wings," by Theodosia Garrison; "The Prodigal Son," by Rudyard Kipling, and "Each in His Own Tongue," by William Carruth.

January meeting of the Albany Woman's Club was held at the clubhouse and was presided over by the president, Mrs. J. C. Britton. The C. L. S. C., of which Mrs. David Brown is leader, was in charge of the literary program. Mrs. W. L. Davis talked on "Citizenship," and Mrs. Brown presented Mrs. H. Fryer, past president of the Albany club, in a discussion of "Georgia Writers and Their Best-Known Works." Among whom were mentioned Sidney Lanier, Georgia's master poet, musician and soldier and acclaimed one of the world's greatest contributors to the wealth of literature; Dr. Francis Orray Ticknor, Albany's own poet; Joel Chandler Harris, of Uncle Remus fame; Corra Harris, the novelist; Augusta Evans Wilson, Robert Loveman, Frank Stanton and a number of others of whom the state is justly proud. Miss Mariwill Brown, accompanied by Mrs. A. H. Tompkins, sang solos. Mrs. Lewis Kopple gave readings from Georgia poets, which included a "Sonnet," by Henry Timrod; "Niagara" and "A Deed," by Robert Loveman; "Sea Lyric," William Hamilton Haines; "The Death of a Dream," by Frank L. Stanton; "Heights," Mary Brent Whiteside; "Ducks and Herons," Agnes Kendrick Gray, and "Renunciation," by Davis Whitehead.

Cochran Club.

Cochran Woman's Club held its January meeting at the clubroom in the city hall and the president, Mrs. L. H. Browning, called the meeting to order. Mrs. T. H. Kimbrough, chairman of better gardens, reported that a $6 premium was paid her committee by the Thomasville Nursery for conducting a rose sale. This committee sponsored the Christmas seal sale for this country and $12 was the percentage retained for tubercular work here. This amount was turned over to the child welfare department to administer. Chairman of child welfare announced that a check for $21 had been given her committee by the Junior Woman's Club to be used for the benefit of the local school. This committee investigated appeals for clothing for school children and will aid the Red Cross in making these garments.

Members of the club discussed plans for the control of malaria in this section. Mrs. J. W. Taylor, chairman of fine arts, presided over the program, and Miss Henrietta Garner, talented local artist, gave a sketch of the life of John LaFarge, American painter; Milton Carlton sang selections, accompanied by Mrs. H. M. Smith at the piano; Miss Frances Ennis, of the Middle Georgia College faculty, talked on "Ceramic Art," and displayed hand-painted china.

Third District Has New Treasurer.

President of the third district of Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. A. C. Moye Jr., Cuthbert, writes that Mrs. J. B. Grimsley, of Fort Gaines, treasurer of third district, has resigned, and that Mrs. A. M. Solomon, of Fort Valley, has been appointed to take her place.

Winder Clubwomen To Feature Citizenship.

January meeting of Winder Women's Club was held at the clubhouse with the president, Mrs. C. A. Carithers, in charge, who asked for the continued co-operation of members, and pledged her best efforts in what is undertaken.

The membership committee presented a new member, Mrs. J. W. A. Davis, who was cordially welcomed by the club. Speaking for the citizenship department, Mrs. A. D. McCurry announced that a class in citizenship would be held soon, with Mrs. W. H. Quarterman as leader, and this department plans to sponsor an organization of Girl Scouts.

The program was in charge of the department of international relations, with Mesdames Carter Daniel and R. L. Ethridge as co-chairmen, and featured a reading, "Who's Afraid?" given by Miss Katherine Blakey; Mrs. Louise Kinnebrew, accompanied by Mrs. Edwin Strange, sang "An Old Shanty in Shanty Town" and "Home."

The chief speaker was Dr. E. M. Coulter, of the University of Georgia, whose message was on "The Far Eastern Situation." He emphasized the importance of "Americans trying to understand the Japanese thinking, and their viewpoint, in order to rightly meet the present serious crisis." He said that "international relations among the civilized nations of the world have changed during the last few decades, and especially since the World War, and the old policy of 'gobbling up' territory has passed. It is very vital that the United States," said Dr. Coulter, "shall try to understand both sides of the Japanese-Chinese situation that hasty, unwise judgments may not bring about serious, and even disastrous complications."

Mesdames Albert Williams, Powell, Quillian, Robert Russell, Herschell Smith, A. B. Steele, O. E. Summerour, S. C. Williams, C. D. Weatherly, E. F. Weaver, R. C. Sharpton and Misses Rosa Rives and Annie Thomas were social hour hostesses.

Cuthbert Club.

One of the most enthusiastic gatherings of the new year was the January meeting of the Cuthbert Woman's Club with the president, Mrs. Charles W. Worrill, presiding. It was voted to sponsor a Georgia products dinner and daffodil luncheon during February, dates and details to be arranged by committee composed of Mesdames A. C. Moye, Charles S. Harris and R. D. Gay. Splendid reports were heard from Mrs. Charles D. Harris, chairman of playground committee; Miss Ida Domingos, chairman of library extension, and Mrs. R. L. Moye, chairman of public welfare.

Mrs. Clinton Moye Jr. presented a program on "Poetry," Miss Ruth McMichael reading the introduction and several of the poems from outline of poetry issued by the state chairman, Mrs. T. Charlton Hudson, of Columbus. A vocal selection was rendered by Mrs. Edward Sealy, followed by a discussion of modern poetry lead by Mrs. Moye, and a violin solo was given by Mrs. Frank Hine, accompanied by Mrs. W. R. Melton.

"As June sped along the highway there was a numbness around her heart"

JED THOMPSON is flying West to overtake June Madison, a platinum blonde, with whom he is in love. He thinks June loves him but because each of them has been warned against the other by a seeress, June has run away and is driving in her roadster to California. But Jed is determine to claim her for his own.

CHAPTER V.

NOTHING is quite so exciting as the open road but as June sped along the great paved highways that lead to the Golden West there was a numbness around her heart. She had the feeling she was running away from happiness.

She couldn't understand why she was doing it. All she knew was that some innate fear of disaster kept her out of Jed Thompson's arms. But even while she was tortured by this superstitious dread she yearned for the dark-haired man against whom the star-gazer had warned her. Every time she thought of him she would remember how the sunlight had made his black hair glisten; his strong, splendid face, the way he looked when he smiled.

"I guess it's love," she said, "if only I weren't such a coward I'd turn back."

The flash of a white plane above her and the thrumming of its speeding motor distracted her for a moment. It passed her and then disappeared in the distance.

"I suppose I'll never see him again," she thought, and felt a lump in her throat. June could not remember ever crying but she felt more like it as she drove over the rolling plains than she ever had before.

Several hours later June saw a dot far away. It proved to be a cowboy who was racing his horse towards her. As they neared each other she was amazed to see that he wore a mask.

"Thinks we are still in the old pioneer days," June laughed to herself. "Jed would be amused by him."

She was getting like that about everything. Each thing she saw or heard or felt in her long, cross-country drive had made her wonder what Jed would think or say about it if he were by her side.

"I must stop it," she told herself. "After all, I'll probably never see him again."

Thinking of him as she was she almost forgot the mysterious masked horseman. They were only a few hundred yards apart now. Suddenly he drew a revolver from the holster at his side . . . and pointed it at her. In terror, she jammed on the brakes.

His horse reared, almost threw him.

"What—what—what do you want?" she stammered as she got out of the car. His cheeks wrinkled into a smile. "Come over here, miss," he said in a low voice.

She obeyed. He put his gun back in place and dismounted. "Get into the saddle."

"But what in the world——?"

"It will be better if you do as I say," he told her softly. "I wish you to come with me."

"But tell me what you want," she demanded. "If it's money, I have very little with me but you're welcome to it, Mr. Bad Man." She recovered her composure. "Besides I'm not going to leave my roadster here."

"I'll send one of the boys for it."

"But you can't force me to go with you. The days of the Wild West are over. You've been seeing too many movies, I think." She laughed in his face and he laughed back at her.

"Mebbe," he admitted. With that he picked the girl up and, though she fought him and screamed, swung her lithe form across the saddle. Then he jumped up back of her and they started off while poor June trembled and fumed in indignation.

"I understand kidnaping's a hanging offense in this State."

"No, it only calls for life imprisonment."

"And threatening a woman with a gun is no laughing matter."

The cowboy handed her the revolver. "You can play with it if you like. It's made of glass."

June angrily examined the toy and then threw it away. The horse was trotting slowly towards the setting sun. "Do you mind telling me where we are going?" asked the girl.

"To my little grey home in the West—to be married." The man behind her shook and roared with laughter.

In a rage June turned about and with lightning-speed tore the mask from his face.

"Why, Jed!" she exclaimed.

"It's I," he said

"But really—" but she could say no more. His arms were about her and his lips pressed hers.

(To be Concluded)

"But you can't force me to go with you," protested June. "The Wild West days are over. You've been seeing too many movies."

A Woman Like Theresa

BLUE RIBBON FICTION

By Brooke Hanlon

The Story of a Very Charming and Selfish Lady, Who Held Her Son by Subtle, Powerful Bonds, and of What Happened When He Fell in Love with an Attractive Young Girl.

KATHERINE looked at Lawrence across the table of a literary restaurant in New York and added, subtracted and multiplied the things she knew about him, fleetingly, in her head. He was twenty-seven, for instance. He knew a lot about innumerable cheap hotels in Europe, and could think in French, German, Italian or Spanish. He had half an engineering course and two sketchy years at architecture, one in Paris and one in Rome. He'd sold bonds during part of a winter in New York and had worked with enthusiasm on the lighting mechanics of a supersound picture during part of another winter in Hollywood. He had done a turn on a newspaper in Miami. He had nice eyes and a sudden smile and a small light mustache. He had a gallery of faces, costumes, gestures, types garnered from hotels and cabin ships, from trains and pensions and cafés in different parts of the world. He had a shy interest in people and a curiosity about books. He had, last of all, Theresa.

"Theresa was discontented in Hollywood," he was telling her. "Look. Not just now, but that's Sarah Carruthers over there. In black. That tired looking egg. We're bringing out her new book. Note the we." He laughed.

Katherine touched her lips with her napkin and studied the shade of the new lipstick. The fleeting pictures she had of Lawrence were coordinating in her mind with a frightening finality, with almost an explosion. There wasn't anything in any of the fragments to account for what happened when—— She looked around hastily. It seemed that all these keen eyed people must know.

"You give New York a lot, don't you?" she said aloud, wisely. "You'll get over that." Her burnished wave showed in a neat scallop at one side of her black hat and again just below her ears. Her voice had the weariness of the initiate, but her lips were astonishingly fresh and eager. Everything in life was to Katherine either a good show or a poor show. Sometimes things deviated sufficiently from the norm to be characterized as a grand show or a rotten show.

"He's just putting on a show," she told her brothers patiently when men occasionally fell in love with her. She was beginning to wish that Lawrence would put on a show.

"Come on out of it," she told herself kindly. "It's your mind he's interested in, most likely." She smiled suddenly and three of the keen eyed people signified approval with a lingering of their glances.

"It's a good show today," she said judiciously. "There's Sterne Gibboney and Barney Milford, and that blonde is Hazel Jennings. She's getting fat. The green suited Nordic is Harry Vincent's wife, and—you never told me why you gave up engineering."

"Great Scott! I had to. I hadn't the foundation. Things piled up on me. Math, mostly. You see," he colored slightly, "I never finished a term at any school. Theresa picked my tutors, and what would a woman know about it. A woman," he finished humorously, "like Theresa."

"There's Gail Jeffrey," Katherine noted. "She's understudy to Martha Hewitt in 'Starlight.' That's Neal Graham coming in with Lila Hayes. It's odd your father didn't see that you finished terms and things."

"I never saw him after the divorce," Lawrence said. "He gave my mother a—a rather bad deal. One tells you things."

"Your mother likes travel, doesn't she?"

"It's more her restlessness," he said honestly. "She's never been well, either, since——" He stopped "You said I was keen about New York. It's not exactly that." He frowned. "It's feeling solid ground under my feet, having work that I like and fit into. In a publisher's office you don't hear about cozines and angles of refraction. I talked to Boyd forty minutes before he asked if I had a degree. He's great, Boyd. I don't mind telling you I was in a panic. Twenty-seven, and no anchor down——"

"You've been with Boyd eleven months, haven't you?" Katherine smiled at him, a special sort of smile which had been six weeks finding its way to her lips.

"Eleven months. I'm getting the swing of it now."

"You're going to stay put this time?" Katherine didn't know that she was crumpling her napkin.

"Am I?" He laughed confidently. "Wild horses couldn't drag me out of New York. We've had an understanding this time, Theresa and I. For a long time she couldn't realize I was grown up, you see——

"Wait till you meet her!" he said enthusiastically, swinging down 5th avenue.

They stood in the thick of pedestrian traffic at the corner of 5th avenue and 42d street and were suddenly loth to part.

"You're so nice," Lawrence said simply.

Katherine felt the special smile coming. She pulled her hands free suddenly and hurried down 42d street.

At six o'clock she had time to think again. The offices of Brenda Thornley, who trafficked in writers, manuscripts and editors, had been officially closed for an hour. Katherine discovered with a start that she was working alone and in half darkness. She went and stood at her window and looked down 5th avenue, which was coming into its jewel-like mood.

"You think you hate New York, and then October comes," she thought. "Then November comes and they sell violets and cook chestnuts in the streets. Then December comes——" Thousands of lights winked at her and the darkness slipped down behind them.

"He said he'd had an understanding with her——" Katherine caught up the thread of her thought. "Darling, darling——"

You don't call a man darling when you've known him only seven weeks.

You do.

Wasn't it an understanding when you started the engineering course at Leland Stanford and didn't have to transfer to M. I. T. and lose credit for half your work?

Didn't you begin architecture in Rome and have to transfer to Paris? When you began a year's architecture in Paris didn't you finish on a newspaper in Miami?

When you got a good berth in a financial house in New York weren't you whisked to Havana?

Ten months in London. Six in Hollywood.

You never finished a term in any school. You changed tutors so fast you——

Darling, darling, what makes you think——

"What's the matter?" Some one had come up behind her.

"Is that you, Pack?"

"It's I, the wreck." The voice took on an elaborate weariness.

"Don't turn the lights on."

"What are you crying about?" She heard him lounge in and sit down on her desk.

"I'm in love, I think."

"Thought it was extinct." She heard the scratch of his match and smelled the friendly smoke of his cigaret.

"I've got to thinking all the time about one person, worrying about him." She couldn't have told even Peck with the lights on. He was small and insignificant looking and wore spectacles; his mustache hairs stood out like rusty wires, and he dickered with the movie people successfully for Brenda Thornley.

"Bad," he murmured. "I got it once and it had me cracking my heels in the air. Here you are all mildewed." His voice wasn't as casual as his words.

Because the light was bad and it was that time of an October day she told Peck about Lawrence. He listened and said something that sounded like "Um" from time to time.

"Um," he said at the end. "Not a lap dog, Katherine?"

"That shows," she said patiently. "I haven't made him clear at all. Just all wrapped up in loyalty to this woman who made him sleep in her room when he was seven and eight and listen to her cry at night. Who sent him to camps, and wired him to come home again. Who entered him in schools, and was conveniently taken ill after a month or six weeks of loneliness. Who picked his tutors—for their eyelashes, no doubt. She—She's given him a rotten show."

"That kind would," Peck said gloomily.

"He's determined to take root somewhere——"

"—And knows she'll uproot him." Peck walked around. "Europe is full of pairs like that." He snapped his fingers. "Divorced women with sons. Running about like chickens with their heads cut off. Looking for another husband. Looking for excitement. Weighed down with marital wrongs and imitation jewelry. When the escort supply in time falls short there's the youth. Sixteen and in a dress suit. Eighteen and wishing he could get on a football team. Twenty-five and wishing he could meet some girl. He may squirm, but chances are he won't even squirm——"

"Peck——"

He was unaware of her. "He's got to make something up to her." He paced, talking. "Does he play good contract? He's got to. Does he dance well? He's got to. How's his social form? Impeccable. Does he have many friends his own age? Not one. Why in the world"—he snapped his fingers more viciously—"did you have to pick an egg like that?"

"Peck——"

"Now, wait a minute," he said hastily. "He's all right. Boyd wouldn't have taken him on if he weren't. Let me look at you. He turned her face up. "By gad, I believe you have got it."

Katherine lighted her desk light and powdered her nose. "I just got mangy sitting here in the dark," she apologized. "Honestly, Peck, I was just putting on a show."

"Yes, you were." He brought her coat. He pushed her hat down over her eyebrows. They walked in silence down five flights of stairs. Peck hailed a cab and put her in it. They waited for the green.

"You'll go to the speakeasy you call home and sit in your cups thinking I've fallen for a gigolo," Katherine mourned.

"The day hasn't come when Boyd takes on inexperienced gigolos." He patted her hand. "And I'm betting on you, Katherine, as a picker. Like Brenda could pick a rising author, like I could pick a falling stock——" he made a histrionic gesture. The cab slid away.

Theresa sang lightly, moving about the compact East-river-facing flat. She was forty-six and moved like a girl. Her dainty gestures were those of a girl, one who had come to flowering in the early hothouse period of the nineties. Her skin was white and her face unlined. Blue shadows, not unbecoming, lay under her eyes. Her hair still harbored golden lights; the inexpensive secret of it was in a little shop just off the Rue de la Paix. Her perfume, chosen carefully, mingled now with the fragrance of Justine's dinner. Her light movements augured that she danced well; her fingers tapping an impatient salute to the lights on the river bore out the fact that she liked to play Liszt, the Brahms Hungarian dances, Chopin.

"Where can he be, Justine?"

"I d'know, Mis' Suth'land." Justine rolled sympathetic eyes.

"Is the dinner spoiled?" Theresa twisted her rings.

"I's keepin' everythin' hot in this hyah steam oven." Virtuous syllables rolled off Justine's tongue.

"Where is he, Tony? Where's Lawrence? Where is that bad, bad boy?" Lawrence's small dog sprang up barking. His body quivered. "Here he is, Tony! Here's Lawrence!" Her hands were on his shoulders. "You're late again!" She pouted prettily. "What kept you? Are you cold?" She straightened his tie; she smoothed his hair.

If he could have stopped off some place for a sandwich—Lawrence's thoughts moved in an undercurrent to Theresa's chatter during dinner. If he could have hurried back to the office to read the translation of the Maurice Giraud book while the original was still fresh in his mind. Boyd wanted a report in the morning. Lawrence had to scheme, to plan, to fight strategically for the freedom of his evenings.

"Now, tell me," Theresa put her spoon daintily into her melon, "why you couldn't meet me for lunch."

"O, that," he said. "I had an engagement."

"Business, dear?"

"In—in a way. A girl from Brenda Thornley's office. We——"

"Attractive?" She shook her head at him and the coral drops at her ears moved.

"All these New York business girls are attractive." There's a spiritual quality in Giraud's book—Boyd had said. A translation might miss it. See if this Thompson—Lawrence held the feeling of what was spiritual in the Giraud book carefully in his mind. Perhaps he could have got away with not coming home for dinner after all.

"You haven't answered my question, Lawrence. He's bad, isn't he, Tony! Bad! Bad!" The coral drops bobbed.

"Katherine is charming," he said thoughtfully.

"You call her Katherine?" She looked up quickly.

"Katherine Powers."

"Listen to him, Tony! He deserts me for a business woman named Katherine Powers. I have to eat alone in the Ritz——"

"You're getting swell, aren't you, Theresa? Lunching in the Ritz."

Her expression changed. "I was lonely," she said. "I thought it would cheer me up to—to——" she let a silence fall.

Lawrence stood up quickly. He stooped down and kissed her. "We'll have lunch together tomorrow," he promised.

"I only wish," he said after a moment, "that she knew French."

"Who?" She looked up, mystified.

"Katherine, of course." He smiled. "But why?"

"There'd be so many ways of telling her what she's like in French."

Lawrence's smile lingered a long time. Theresa watched it fade.

"The reason," she made sudden animated small movements, "I wanted to have dinner early tonight——"

"Look here, Theresa. You didn't make plans for me?"

"Just bridge with the Gardners, downstairs."

"But I brought some work home." She fell silent.

"It's important, Theresa, rather. You see——"

She didn't break her silence. The coral earrings were still. He looked away, and back at her miserably.

"I've been alone all day," she said at last.

The Gardners didn't often break up a bridge session before one. They served sickeningly sweet drinks, and Abby Gardner smoked a certain sort of perfumed cigaret. She smoked fiercely, one scented tube after another, and their flat was poorly ventilated.

"All right, Theresa," he said lightly. "What time do we open fire?"

He sat for a while on the edge of his bed and ran his fingers through his hair. "O, gosh——" his thoughts found helpless expression.

Theresa looked in at him, a soft blue fringed garment falling about her. "We'll have her in for tea Sunday," she said brightly. "Your Katherine."

"You peach," Lawrence sprang up. "I'd never have thought of it."

Katherine, sitting by their fire on Sunday afternoon! Katherine, right here in this flat! He tapped, whistling softly. He went to put on a fresh tie.

Theresa had a score of gracious little hospitalities. She had a hundred dainty gestures. Behind them she watched the long legged, graceful girl who sipped her tea Sunday. The visitor was all brown and bronze in the firelight. A fine bronze chain lay about her neck. Bronze buckles were on her slippers. Why had Lawrence been so stubborn Thursday night? Why had he refused to break engagements with this girl twice in one week? Theresa played with a filmy blue chiffon handkerchief, gold initialed in one corner.

"Her skin is nicer than most," she admitted reluctantly.

Was Lawrence really interested in her? Of course not.

Katherine was negligently at home with them, all the planes of her face alight. "It's been a swell day." She put the seal of her approval on it joyously. "I rode this morning in the park with Bob and Michael. Now here I am toasting myself in front of this delightful fire." She looked at Lawrence. Their eyes were continually pulling up that way, leaving other things, finding one another.

Of course not. Theresa felt as though she had been wrenched from sleep. She had felt that way several times before. Once in Miami. Once on shipboard.

"You're not too warm?" Lawrence asked, hovering. He set a screen up, careful that it should shield the girl, yet not shut off her view of the fire. He moved a hassock and Katherine's slim brown slippers rested on it.

"Lawrence," Theresa said suddenly, "will you see if that bedroom door is closed, dear? There seems to be a draught——"

Theresa flirted her handkerchief. She talked of Nice, of Monte Carlo, of Biarritz, Lausanne. Her eyes were suddenly tired and she was cold. She leaned forward and stirred the logs. In the sudden light she looked at Lawrence.

"I should have kept him in France," she thought.

"Nonsense."

She fell silent now, and the younger two talked about boks.

"Take Hemingway——" Katherine said excitedly.

"Take Bromfield——" Lawrence said.

They took the younger writers and poets in their turn, lingered on them, dismissed them.

"Won't you play for us, Theresa?" Lawrence remembered tardily.

Theresa played. Lawrence sat on the hassock at Katherine's feet and Tony slept on the floor between them. If she hadn't been there, Theresa knew, Lawrence's hand would have reached for the girl's. Theresa knew how such scenes came about in firelight with dusk coming on. She played badly.

When the music was finished the light was gone. "I must go," Katherine discovered with a start. They murmured things. "It was nice of you to ask me." "The music was lovely." "It was sweet of you to come."

Theresa watched Lawrence help Katherine into her smart short jacket. When the door had closed behind them she came back and stood in front of the fire.

The apartment seemed deserted when Lawrence came back and Justine met him in the hall. She was tip-toeing. "Yo' maw's done took down sick," she advised him. "She tole me to bring her supper in. Mos' likely you will eat in there, too."

"Yes, that's all right," Lawrence said inattentively. High spirits clung to him. The echo of Katherine's laugh was in his ears.

"Well, Theresa," he chided, "what's this? A headache? Shall I eat in here with you?"

"Please do." Theresa's voice was subdued. "It's my throat again." She put her hand up. "I could feel it coming on all day, but—Justine will fix the bed table for us. She's very sweet, isn't she?"

"Justine?" He laughed.

"Your Miss Powers. A little bookish, perhaps." Theresa let pillows be arranged for her. She let a warm robe be thrown about her shoulders. She swallowed and the effort brought to her smooth face a contraction of pain.

"Now, look here, young lady, we can't have this," Lawrence said absently. He set up the bed table. It was a familiar rite, and he wasn't seriously disturbed. Theresa was the sort of woman who went to bed easily, who liked to have her meals served there. She liked the coziness that this induced, and the feeling of being waited on. Lawrence, therefore, remained cheerful.

The pleasant warmth of the room, the familiarity of this boudoir supper, the preciousness of the one cigaret she permitted him, all these contributed to his feeling of well being. He grinned lazily, watching the smoke trail up. Boyd had liked his report. It looked as though more Italian, French and Spanish books might come his way. The taxi ride to Washington Heights had been too short by far. They'd gone through the park. There was a cute indentation in Katherine's chin just below one corner of her mouth when she laughed. Cute! He stretched lazily.

"What are you thinking of, Lawrence?" Theresa was still picking delicately at food. At each swallow her hand went to her throat.

He crushed his cigaret. "I'm planning to take Dr. Folwell's prescription out and have it filled for you, young lady," he said. "You're to go right to sleep then, and in the morning you'll be all shipshape."

"Thank you, son. If you would——"

It was only 9 o'clock. He walked secure in the East River streets of the fantastic town, its fantastic towers massed against the moon on his left. "It's senseless," he'd told Katherine, "the feeling I have these nights when the lights come on. A come-home-at-last feeling. What the hell——" he'd become embarrassed. "You know. Of course, we've been here before, but——" Katherine gave him a particular sort of smile after a confidence of this sort. A tenderness stirred at the bottom of his thoughts. Love was like that. This was love. He walked.

She smiled at Peck as at the whim of a child.

"How was everything?" Peck poked his head into Katherine's office next morning.

"Everything," Katherine leafed a manuscript carefully, "was lovely."

"Yes?" Peck lighted a cigaret.

"She was sweet to me," Katherine said.

"She would be." He waited.

"O, Peck," she burst forth at last. "She's spoiled! She's the child and he's the grownup. It's always going to be that way. It's——" She stopped and looked at him helplessly.

"Um," Peck growled, "why don't you let me take you to a show tonight?"

"I had Dr. Folwell in," Theresa told Lawrence. She hadn't got up for breakfast that morning. Justine served dinner again in her room. Her fragile hand was on Lawrence's sleeve as he sat at her bedside. She was pale, he noticed.

"Lawrence," she bit her lip. "Dr. Folwell says I shouldn't, after all, attempt to stay here this winter."

Lawrence didn't say anything. He didn't look at her. After a moment he picked up the hand that lay on his sleeve and put it aside. He walked away from her, stood with his back to her by a window.

"Perhaps you won't mind so much," she coaxed nervously. "Perhaps you're tired of New York now. He suggested Nassau, southern France——"

"It would have been nice to have you here with me this winter," he said at last with difficulty.

"But you'd go with me?"

"No, mother."

He lighted a cigaret and still did not face her. The food Justine had prepared cooled on the table.

"Lawrence, come here." She put her hand again on his arm. She clung to him. There were tears on her cheeks and she was without makeup, a little faded and worn.

"We may as well eat," Lawrence said. He tried to follow out his own suggestion, but made a poor business of it. Tired lines had appeared between his eyes.

"Does this Boyd position mean so much to you?" Theresa asked at last fearfully.

"Yes," he said quietly. His quietness broke then. "Am I never to finish anything?" he burst forth bitterly. "Is there a law against my ever staying a year in any one place?" He was subdued again, tired. "There's Miami," he said. "Aunt Amy would be glad to have you spend the winter with her."

She began to cry at that, silently and softly. Lawrence stood again by the window and his shoulders slumped a little. He went to bed finally, but there was no getting away from the knowledge that Theresa was crying. You might be eight again, or ten, or twelve, he thought, lying in the darkness and feeling a woman cry. He got up finally and thrust his feet into slippers.

"Buck up now, young lady," he said helplessly. He patted her pillows and her hand. "I'm going to get you a sleeping powder."

He had given her sleeping powders before. He mixed it skillfully in the bathroom.

"You're all I have, Lawrence," she whimpered.

"That's enough of this foolishness, lady." Lawrence's voice was gentle. "I'll be here waiting for you, remember. Perhaps I can get down at Christmas time. I'll be writing you, calling you up. It isn't as though——"

She was weeping again, softly. There wasn't any way of stopping her. For a week there wasn't any way of stopping her.

"I'm all she has," he told Katherine a week later at lunch. He was tired. His voice was lifeless. The fingers that dropped sugar into his cup weren't very steady.

"We're going to Nassau the middle of the month. I give Boyd notice on the first."

"I think," Katherine began with difficulty. "I think you're fine to consider her first." She forced her eyes up. She buttered an end of roll carefully.

"It's her throat," he told her. "It's always been troublesome."

"A warm climate will be ever so much better," she said. "You'll find something to do in Nassau. That is——"

"Of course," he assented.

They talked over and under and around the things that were between them clamoring to be said. "Has it always been her throat"—bitter words were hurting Katherine's throat—"or was it perhaps her heart one time, her nerves another time, her blood pressure?"

"What can I do?" This weary question was behind Lawrence's eyes. "She depends on me so. If she isn't ill now she will make herself ill."

"She's spoiled," Katherine's thoughts accused him stormily, "Spoiled! She——"

"She's old and foolish and lonely, Katherine. She's my mother. My father——"

"If you lose this time you've lost for good. Can't you see it?"

"What reason have I to think I'll get anywhere with Boyd?" Discouragement pressed down upon him.

"Nassau will be gorgeous," Katherine said aloud. She looked at a far corner of the dining room and saw nothing.

He told her, heavily, about Nassau. They had been there one winter before, he and Theresa.

"Katherine," he caught her hands when they came to a corner at which they separated. "Katherine——"

She steered him carefully over this. There was nothing but friendliness in the pressure of her fingers.

Back at the office Peck looked at her. "Well?" he prompted.

"They're going to Nassau," she told him. "Lawrence is going with his mother to Nassau, I mean." She clasped her hands aimlessly, unclasped them. "That's that," she said.

Peck was silent.

"Why don't you say it?" she asked at length.

"Say what, child?" His voice was kind.

"I—I told you so."

Still he said nothing.

"She's old and silly and just a little bit cheap." She began fighting his silence at length. She piled up words in Lawrence's defense. "Perhaps he has to——" She wandered about the office. She clasped her hands again tightly. "What do you know about it?" Her voice became stormy. "I wish you could have seen him. Think—think how long it has been going on——"

"Enter Dr. Brown——" There was no saying at what time Peck might appear in the office. Some days they did not see him at all. It was better to have him in than out these days, Katherine thought. "Gaze on Dr. Brown's favorite prescription," he invited. "Four pasteboards to 'Woman, Woman' with reservations at the Club Capri. Mix well and shake. This peerless elixir, washed down by a modest amount of the old Indian herb Katonkah, will put oil in the joints and hair on the pate, will restore the old come-on to the lack lustre orb——"

"It looks," Katherine smiled because she thought he wanted her to, "like a party."

"A party for Theresa, Inc., and son, for you and for me. What ho—and bring on the wassail."

"What's the idea, Peck?"

"After you introduced me to the egg all was easy." He sat on the edge of her desk and swung his leg. "I wormed my way right up to the hearth rug. Behold the original warmer-up to hearth rugs. Last night was a big evening of Chopin, Grieg and Brahms."

"You mean you——"

"Seek not to penetrate the veil," Peck advised negligently.

"Theresa——"

"Just crawl into the bunny skin Thursday night and follow in my wake." He slid from the desk. "And don't, in the meantime," he turned gruff, "go around here looking as though the Empire State building had collapsed."

She stood up and faced him. "I thought—I'd avoid him as much as——"

But Peck had turned on his heel.

She danced with Lawrence at the Club Capri, and didn't know whether she was happy or unhappy. He was here, but he was going away. There were periods of ten or fifteen minutes when they forgot this fact. Then it swooped down on them and they sat silent, listening to the talk of the older two. There had been a battle between Katherine and Theresa and Theresa had won. Both knew the exact moment at which victory had been declared.

"The thing to do," Katherine advised herself, "is to keep up a front. The thing to do is to keep up a front——" Why, she wondered, had Peck let her in for this.

Gayety sat becomingly upon Theresa. She made her dainty gestures. She danced lightly with Peck and with Lawrence. She chattered and color came into her cheeks. There wasn't, she discovered, any corner of the world that Peck hadn't seen. He picked up her cues unfailingly. They compared foods, wines, women and hostleries unendingly.

"The continental woman is so much more intriguing——" Theresa suggested.

"The American woman who has lived on the continent is the most alluring in the world," Peck thought.

Yes, her throat was better these dry days, Theresa admitted. She touched it daintily. She lifted a glass to her lips and grimaced, not unbecomingly.

Katherine didn't know whether she was happy or unhappy, having dinner with Peck and Lawrence in Theresa's apartment. She remembered the afternoon she'd had tea here, and that it was three weeks ago. She and Lawrence played bad bridge after dinner; Theresa and Peck played faultless bridge. Theresa's cheeks took on faint color.

Peck came into the office with tickets for the Columbia-Cornell game, for the Dartmouth-Harvard game, for the Princeton-Yale game. Katherine let Lawrence hold her hands under a motor robe, to warm them. He came in with tickets to the shows that were hardest to see, with tickets for Garden bouts and hockey matches. They danced, dined—they played bridge.

"I didn't know you could be so rah-rah," Katherine told him. "I thought—I would try not seeing Lawrence so much——"

"Dr. Brown," he always interrupted her enigmatically at this point, "is at the bedside."

Theresa's eyes were bemused the night of Romeo and Juliet. Peck had produced his favorite speakeasy with a flourish. It was subterranean, but cozy and Holland-kitchen clean. The proprietor had produced Theresa's favorite wine.

"I didn't know there was any of this in New York," she said, sipping it.

Katherine looked at Lawrence and he looked back at her. There was no happiness left now. They didn't dance tonight. Tomorrow he was to give notice to Boyd.

"Listen, darling," Theresa sipped in drowsy contentment. "We aren't going away. I cancelled those reservations three days ago and we're staying in New York. You can keep on going downtown to play. It's what he likes, Peck." She smiled at Peck as at the whim of a child. "Playing with books. He always did, even at an age when he held them upside down. I won't be frightened off by that old fossil of a Folwell. My throat is well enough. I'll have to be careful, that's all." Her laughter bubbled. Her coral ear drops bobbed. She chattered, and Peck listened.

"We must have another evening of music," he suggested. Peck had a soothing and an attentive way.

Lawrence's forehead had knotted slowly. He leaned forward. "Theresa, do you mean I'm not to give notice to Boyd? Do you mean that?"

"Of course you're not, darling." She turned to Peck. "I burn so easily—the sun at Nassau——"

"With your skin," Peck said subtly.

"You're sure you mean it, Theresa?" Lawrence pressed. It was at Katherine that he looked.

"Now, what?" Peck had been away three days. He lounged into Katherine's office and his voice was casual.

"We're going to be married," Katherine said. She was grave, thoughtful.

"I hoped you'd be up to your stuff." He nodded. "Soon?"

"Right away. Lawrence wants it to be that way. He—he wants to have another anchor down."

"Good," Peck said briefly. He paced. "I suppose you know what you're letting yourself in for?" he growled.

"Yes. You think that's the thing to do, don't you? You think we'll be happy, don't you? It's going to be all right, isn't it?"

"If I didn't think so," Peck blew a smoke ring neatly, "would I have lapped up all the piano music? The saxophone is my instrument, baby, and don't forget it! Poker is my game, not football."

"We're taking a two room apartment in the same building," Katherine said. The troubled look went slowly from her eyes. It was washed down before a radiance which she had to lower her lashes quickly to hold. "I think that's best, don't you? She's as pleased as—she's been sweet, really."

"She doesn't know her show is over," Peck said meditatively. "I have her under an anæsthetic. And tonight," he went on dreamily, "is to be a big evening of Chopin and Brahms and—who's that other chap——"

"You're swell, Peck." Katherine's voice went low. "You put on a swell show. But——"

"Liszt!" he remembered. "He's the onion. He wrote something called——"

"Is it fair, Peck? You aren't listening—is it fair? We——"

"Liebestraum! That's it, Liebestraum. Has she been fair?"

New Light on Cleopatra's Treasures

By John A. Menaugh

WHAT schoolboy has not given glib tongue to that pathetic eloquence, "I am dying, Egypt, dying"? What love-sick maiden has not thrilled at the amorous story of the great Cæsar and the Siren of the East? What dreamer of dreams has not painted his own mental picture of the beautiful Queen Cleopatra riding in elegance upon her regal barge, its purple, perfumed sails filling above a deck of beaten gold? What—but why go on? Every one knows Cleopatra was the IT queen of all history. And were she not, we still would like to believe her the most beautiful, the most alluring, the most magnificent, the richest, the cleverest, and at the end the most tragic.

Cleopatra has been dead a long, long time—to be exact, 1,963 years. Little remains in the world to remind us of the grandeur that was Cleopatra's. A doubtful relic here or there in some musty museum, a couple of unauthentic busts in London, a few weather-beaten blocks of stone, called ruins, in Egypt—these things, and nothing more, were all the world had up until just the other day to link the present to the time when the gorgeous Cleopatra ruled in the Grecian city of Alexandria, on the shore of the Eleusinian sea.

Now comes the young Count Byron Khun de Prorok, explorer and archeologist, with the claim that he has just dug up from the ruins of Cleopatra's summer palace near Alexandria 800 flawless emeralds. The count says he is sure these emeralds are the first intimate possessions of the Egyptian queen ever unearthed. Some of the gems, he says, weigh only a fraction of a carat each, while others are as great as fifteen carats. With the emeralds, the count adds, he found jewelry set with garnets and carnelians.

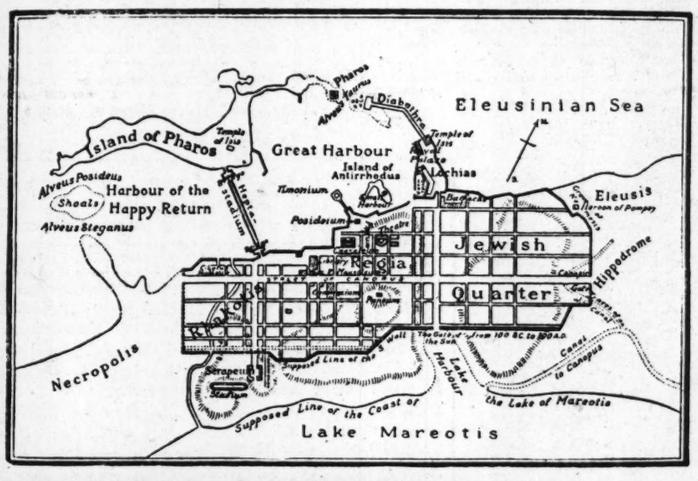

A bust of Queen Cleopatra VII. in the British museum. Historians are not sure that this is an accurate likeness of the queen.

De Prorok is not a new subject of news dispatches. It was he who conducted extensive excavations at Carthage and Utica, who claimed to have found the land of the Hoggar in the Sahara, who discovered the tomb of Queen Tin-Hanan near Tamanresset, in the Atlas mountains who unearthed the "Libyan Venus," which he ascribed to a sculptor of thousands of years ago. Not all archeologists support the young man's claims, but he keeps on digging wherever he can find promising ruins, enthusiastic in his undertakings and undaunted by doubters.

If it is proved that the precious stones unearthed near Alexandria by De Prorok are some of those actually possessed and worn by Cleopatra, the discovery undoubtedly will go down in history as one of the most important of archeological finds. It is known that the queen maintained a summer palace outside her capital city, to which she often retreated to escape the more ponderous elegance of her royal abode at Lochias, whose thick walls lay in the shadow of the great Alexandrian temple of Isis. It is reasonable to suppose that the queen might have ordered a slave to carry her emeralds, garnets, and carnelians to the summer palace, where she could enjoy the flashing lights of their facets in some secret open court under a blazing Egyptian sun. It is also reasonable to suppose that she might have forgotten those gems as she hurried away to meet Antony on the eve of the naval battle with the Roman Octavius, which ended in disgrace and finally brought self-inflicted death upon the queen and her vanquished lover. Forgotten in some hidden cabinet, the gems could have lain for years and centuries until the toppling walls of the summer palace buried them beneath tons of rubble and earth.

The preservation of the royal jewels of Cleopatra may have been due either to accident or to cold-hearted disregard for the memory of the queen.

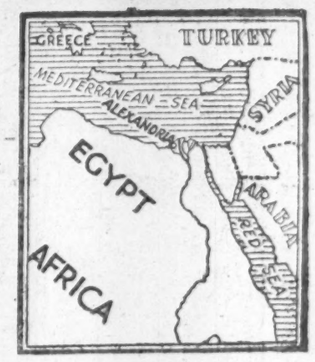

At any rate, this is certain: If the thieves who operated in Egypt in the centuries between the death of the last of the Ptolemaic queens and modern times had known of the existence of priceless emeralds in the ruins near Alexandria, De Prorak never would have found those emeralds.

Map of Egypt of the time of the Ptolemaic dynasty, showing the location of Alexandria, in the delta of the Nile.

Historians have reconstructed in elaborate maps the city of Alexandria, where Cleopatra, the seventh queen of that name, lived in heathenish luxury and ruled over a land of which she knew little. It is said that she never ventured into the hinterland, and that only on one occasion she rode on a barge on the Nile. That excursion upon the placid river was at the insistence of Julius Cæsar, the middle-aged Roman rake, triumphant in numerous conquests of women as well as of barbarian lands, who came down from the north and met the 20-year-old girl queen when she was more beautiful than any woman he ever had seen before.

Alexandria was typically a Grecian city. It was founded by Alexander the Great, the youthful Macedonian warrior king before whom virtually the whole known world had bowed. The city was Greek in character; its public buildings and temples were constructed in the Greek manner; the art of the period was Greek; the life of the upper classes was lived according to Greek habits: the language spoken by the people was Greek, with a broad Macedonian accent. The Ptolemaic dynasty was founded in the first years of the third century before Christ by Ptolemy, the son of Lagos, one of the Macedonian generals in the army of Alexander, who on his master's death seized the province of Egypt and made himself king. The dynasty presided over the destinies of Egypt for about 250 years, coming to an end with the death of Cleopatra and her son, Ptolemy XVI. (Cæsarion).

Cleopatra has been pictured as a swarthy, raven-haired Egyptian, of the sensuous, vampire type. But Cleopatra was not an Egyptian. She was Greek by blood, by manner, and in thought. She wore Grecian clothes, conversed with her friends in Greek, and gave orders to her slaves in that language. Some historians even have ventured to say that she was a blonde, with blue eyes, but that assertion could only be based upon a guess. The somewhat doubtful busts in the British museum do not betray the color of her hair or eyes.

DURANGO, GATEWAY TO PAST CENTURIES

DURANGO, Colorado, near which the unexplained cracking and sliding of a mountain has aroused nation-wide interest, is virtually fenced off from the rest of Colorado by mountain barriers, says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Georgraphic Society.

"The Continental Divide—the backbone of the Rockies—towers to the east," continues the bulletin; "the lofty Needle mountains close in on the north, and the rugged La Platas rise steeply a few miles to the northwest. The natural outlets of the southwestern corner of Colorado, where Durango lies, are southward into New Mexico through the valley of the Animas river, and westward among low hills and across desert stretches into Utah.

Trains of Lilliput.

"Two excellent highways breach the mountain barriers to north and east. One winds its way over a high pass between the Needle and La Plata mountains; the other over still loftier Wolf Creek pass in the Rockies. But in winter, snows sometimes close these roads for weeks, and Durango then must look to its neighboring states for contacts.

"From Durango one may make a unique journey on the little trains of the narrow-gauge railway that dips down into New Mexico and dodges back into Colorado over the Continental Divide at Cumbres Pass—the only rail service that Durango has. They seem like the trains of Lilliput, these strings of toylike coaches drawn by bantam locomotives; but they have proved their worth to southwestern Colorado, which has been dependent on them since the first track of steel was pushed over the divide, in 1881. They had, in fact, all Colorado for their domain in those days.

Narrow Gauge Made Development Possible.

"Construction in the mountains was so costly and grades were so steep that building standard railways with heavy rolling stock was out of the question. The narrow gauge saved the day. It nosed its way into almost every canyon where gold and silver were discovered, following hard on the heels of the pioneers. Hundreds of mines, at first dependent on wagon transportation, were saved by these quickly built railways.

"Through Durango passes a rapidly growing stream of tourists, for the town is the eastern gateway to the cliff dwellings of the Mesa Verde National park. Mesa Verde (Green Table) looms up 30 miles west of Durango, a huge block of rock and earth rising 2,000 feet above a level plain. You must climb to the top of this tableland to reach the canyons in which are hidden some of America's most fascinating and mysterious ruins; but the climb is no longer difficult. The National park service has built a broad motor road that winds up the steep slope of the mesa, traverses for nearly 15 miles the juniper and pinon forests of its top, and leads to the cliff dwellings near the southern rim.

"Into the south end of the great mesa a maze of deep canyons has been eaten by erosion, leaving narrow tongues of land between them. Under great overhanging masses of sandstone near the tops of these canyons the cliff dwellers built their homes.

Apartment Houses 700 Years Old.

"You pick your way on foot along a narrow trail that leads below a canyon rim and drop straightway into distant centuries. You pass beside steep, sloping cliffs of sandstone into which brown workers pecked hand and toe holds long before Columbus was born, round a huge boulder, and come upon a great structure of masonry, story piled upon story, stretching along the canyon wall.

"The dry air and the protection afforded by the overhanging rock have preserved these buildings so well that it is hard to believe that they were built seven or eight hundred years ago and have probably stood abandoned for half a millennium. The age of these cliff dwellings was a mystery to archeologists until the secret was solved by the ingenious tree-ring calendar developed by Dr. Andrew E. Douglass while investigating the age of Pueblo Bonito for the National Geographic Society.

"Cliff Palace was under construction seven years after William the Conqueror invaded England, and Spruce Tree House was rising under its cliff while half around the world Genghis Khan and his hordes were conquering all Asia. The youngest beam found in any of the buildings was put in place in 1262, nearly two and a half centuries before white men brought their civilization to the New World."

OF ALL the jewel robberies in which Arthur Barry took part during his flashy career there was none more spectacular than his invasion of the Long Island mansion of Joshua Cosden while the Prince of Wales was a guest there. It was then the suave, good-looking, well-dressed "Raffles" brought into play all his skill as a "gentleman burglar," even developing a friendship with the English Prince.

Although Barry was not tried for this robbery—chiefly because authorities were content with his conviction in the Livermore case—he readily confessed his guilt but withheld details. Today his petite, blond-haired wife, Anna Blake Barry, tells for the first time the inside story of that amazing feat.

It is told in the words of a woman who stood courageously by her husband during his troubles with the law, including his three years as a fugitive from justice, following his escape from Auburn Prison during the bloody riot of July, 1929, his recapture and later trial.

EVERYTHING seemed to be going along fine during that first year after Arthur's escape from Auburn Prison. We were nicely settled in the Newark apartment, we were generally accepted by our neighbors and newly made friends as "Mr. and Mrs. Jim Toner" and we no longer trembled when we greeted the policeman on the corner near our home.

Indeed, we soon learned that among the tenants in our apartment building were two police officers, one a lieutenant and the other a sergeant. For a while we were suspicious that they had taken quarters there in order to keep an eye on us.

But soon we learned to our satisfaction that they had been living in the building long before we moved in. What is more, they greeted us sometimes in the hallway with a casual "hello" and a mention of the weather. Eventually, as I shall explain later, Arthur was to risk his liberty by deliberately becoming friends of the policemen—carrying out that friendship to the point where he even played poker with them!

As I say, everything seemed to be so smooth that I left for New York one day with an almost light heart. I always went to New York about the first of every month, remaining there a week or ten days in order to get some money regularly due me and to transact other business. I also thought it advisable to be seen around my own home, my sister's home and other likely places in case I was being watched. That is why, I think, the authorities did not suspect I knew of Arthur's whereabouts.

During these trips to New York I would make it a point to telephone Arthur at least once from some public booth. That was because no matter how smoothly things might seem to be going there was always the fear hanging over me that something awful might happen to smash our happiness. But this time, when I telephoned I was not particularly worried as I asked him the usual question. "Anything doing?" Then my heart sank as he almost shouted over the 'phone:

"There's plenty doing! For God's sake, sweet, get over here right away. I need your help."

I wasted no time. I took a taxicab to the "tube" station and all the way over to Newark on the train a hundred fearful things whirled through my head. What had happened? Had the policemen in the apartment building recognized him as Arthur Barry? Had his two best friends in Newark threatened to give him away? Had he done something that might lead him into the hands of the law? Had Arthur—the thought tortured me—had he decided to take a chance on one more jewelry job?

I WAS in a cold sweat as I rushed into the apartment. But I was not prepared for the emergency confronting me. There stood Arthur, with a faint sign of a smile on his face, as I threw my arms around him and cried: "What is it, darling? Tell me!"

He said nothing at first. He handed me a slip of paper.

"Look at this," he said. "It's a new one on me."

I stared at the slip of paper in amazement. It was a subpoena for "James Toner" to appear for jury duty in one of the trial courts! I stared at the paper and then at Arthur and then fell into a chair laughing hysterically. This—this was too much!

But as I continued to laugh, unable to speak, Arthur shook me.

"Listen, sweet," he said, "I'll admit it IS funny. But it's damned serious, too. We've got to think—and think fast!"

THAT sobered me. "What can we do What can we do?" I kept asking myself, while Arthur was talking at the same time.

"I've been in some pretty tough spots in my life," he was saying, "and I've got out of most of them. But this thing has me stopped. What can I do?"

Well, I knew one thing he couldn't do—and that was to dare appear in the courtroom for jury duty! And I knew, too, that to ignore the summons would be equally dangerous, for it would cause an investigation into Arthur's affairs.

Unable to think straight on the matter, I called up the friends who first invited us to Newark shortly after Arthur's escape from Auburn Prison. For obvious reasons I cannot give their names here, but for purposes of identification I'll call them the Smiths. Mrs. Smith seemed to understand all about jury subpoenas and she told me to leave everything in her hands. She would fix it up.

She went to the court clerk and told him that she was "Jim Toner's sister-in-law" and that the Toners were not in town. She added that the Toners had gone to Okl homa to visit relatives and would not be back for some time. The court clerk was skeptical and grouchy about it and said. "Too many people are 'out of town' when they receive a notice to serve on the jury."

But Mrs. Smith assured him that we were not in town. The clerk finally agreed to accept the excuse and said he would call on "Mr. Toner" some other time. So we escaped that situation and breathed easily, although, just to be on the safe side, we stayed close to the apartment.

A month passed. One day, while returning from the movies, we noticed something peeking out from under the door. Arthur greeted it with an ominous "Oh-oh!" It was another jury notice—but this time it was for both of us to serve!

Again we were panic-stricken and again we called upon Mrs. Smith for help. She went down to the clerk once more and insisted that we had not returned to town. This time the clerk was even more skeptical and impatient. But again Mrs. Smith finally convinced him that we were not in town. So we got by. But we were so thoroughly scared by this time that we remained indoors for several days. We were afraid they would try to "check up" on us and thought perhaps we might even be watched.

THERE was nothing to do, during our voluntary imprisonment, but to read the newspapers. We read everything, even the want ads. That is how, one day, Arthur came across a piece of news on the society page that brought back old memories.

Of course, the society page was no stranger to Arthur. He told me that it was his one "source of information" in the old days when he carried out his jewelry robberies. The society page gave him "leads" as to where important parties were being held and often it even gave details of the jewelry worn and by whom.

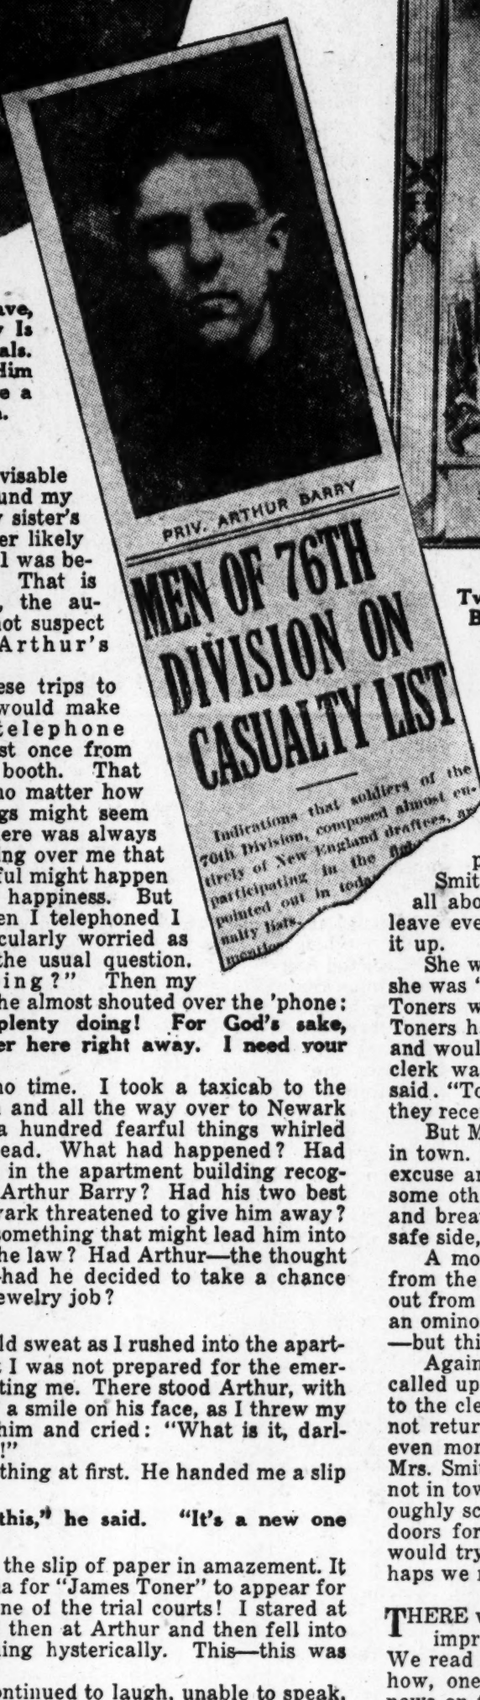

Well, one morning, while he was reading the paper, he turned to me and said kiddingly:

"My deah Mrs. Toner. Did you really notice this morning that deah Mrs. Cosden has just returned from Europe? My, my, how time flies..."

"Cosden?"

"Sure, the Long Island Cosdens." Arthur was laughing and then, dropping his mimicking, he said seriously, "Don't you remember the Prince of Wales?""

Yes, now that I recall it, I did remember how Arthur was connected with an incident centering around the Prince of Wales. But I didn't see what that had to do with the Cosdens. In fact, it was not until recently that I learned the inside story of the famous Cosden jewelry job. Arthur had never mentioned it to me, but according to his own confession to the police it was the last big job he ever pulled off before he married me. And I want to say here and now that I firmly believe Arthur never did take part in any jewelry robbery after our marriage—until he was lured into the Livermore job by "Boston Billy" Williams.

BUT I think this is the best place to explain the Cosden robbery and how Arthur became acquainted with the Prince of Wales. The robbery occurred, it may be recalled, in September, 1924. That was before I had known Arthur very well —indeed, before my first husband's death. But two or three months later Arthur took me one night to the Club Deauville.

What struck me as unusual was that as we entered the club one of the entertainers came over to Arthur and put a Hawaiian lei around his neck. At the same time one of the night club managers came over, bowed, and said, "Have you heard from the Prince lately?" Arthur smiled and said he hadn't. But I noticed all the waiters kept watching him and making a big fuss over him, while diners at various tables were eyeing him as though he were some tremendously important individual.

I was so curious that I finally said to Arthur: "What did the manager mean by 'the prince'?"

"Oh," he smiled, "one night several weeks ago, during the Prince of Wales' visit to America, we had a little party together here. And ever since they treat me as though I were the Prince, himself."

That's all he said about the matter that night. But there were many things I wanted to ask him. Why did he and the Prince have a party together? How did he meet the Prince? Arthur guessed that these questions were in my mind, for he patted my hand and said: "Don't you worry about such matters, my dear."

I CONCLUDED that Arthur must be tremendously important. Of course, at the time I knew him as Dr. Gibson and, for all I knew, he might be a society doctor. A few nights later Arthur asked me to meet him at the Club Deauville. He said he would be late but told me to order dinner and champagne and enjoy myself as best I could alone. So when I entered the club the manager came up, showed me to a ringside table and made a fuss over me.

Unable to control my curiosity any longer I asked him to tell about "Dr. Gibson" and the Prince of Wales. The manager was willing. He said that one night the Prince and his party came to the Club Deauville for a good time. The Prince, it seems, was a little tired of all the official and formal affairs to which he was subjected and he longed for some real relaxation.

At the time reporters were searching all over the city for the Prince but he couldn't be found. The newspapers announced that for one whole night the Prince had been "lost." Well, he was in the Club Deauville. Arthur also came in with a small party and as he was being shown to his table the Prince waved over to him, hailing him by his adopted name, "Dr. Gibson." Thereupon, Arthur—or "Dr. Gibson"—joined the Prince and for some time the party went merrily on.

The manager who told me the story, however, was unable to explain how it happened that "Dr. Gibson" and the Prince were such good friends. I learned all about it later. It seems that at the time of the Prince's visit to America in 1924 the newspapers were filled with stories about his Long Island host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Cosden.

ARTHUR at the time was in partnership with "Boston Billy" Williams and together they carried on their jewelry robberies. One day the two of them were particularly fascinated by the report of a great house party to be given in honor of the Prince of Wales by the Cosdens in their beautiful mansion, "The Cedars," at Port Washington, Long Island. Among the guests were to be Lord and Lady Mountbatten and Lady Mountbatten then was called "the richest girl in the world."

Naturally, at such a party there would be costly jewels in profusion. Many of these jewels would be worn but many also probably would be left in the rooms of the guests. There were two ways to go after the jewelry—either wait until the guests had gone to bed or else ransack the rooms while the party was at its height.

Arthur and his party chose the second plan as the safer of the two. But it meant much careful preparation. Of course, they would have to wear evening clothes no matter what plans they made, since guests would be about the grounds. To get into the building they could take the chance of appearing at the main entrance as "guests" or else do some second-story climbing.

Crashing a formal party, Arthur once said to me, is more dangerous than getting into the house through second-story work—even though, as in the case of the Prince of Wales party, there might be many guests present who were personally unknown to the hosts.

WINTER SCENE

"The Cedars," Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Cosden's Elaborate Mansion at Port Washington, Long Island, Where Barry Carried Out a Jewelry Robbery While the Prince of Wales Was a Guest.

At any rate, Arthur dressed faultlessly in his evening clothes—he always looked handsome in them—and he and "Boston Billy" went out to the Cosden home. It is a beautiful home surrounded by spacious lawns. Abundant shrubbery made it easy for Arthur to get to the house without being seen. Fortunately, the house is so constructed, with generous porches about it, that it was unnecessary for Arthur to bring along a ladder—something he did in other jobs.

So without any trouble he climbed to the roof of a porch, reached up and drew himself to the ledge of a second-story window which—because of Summer—was wide open. He found himself in the hallway. From downstairs floated up laughter and gay conversation and music. Swiftly, Arthur went from room to room.

TO HIS disappointment, there were no jewels worth taking. He would have to return another night, when the guests were asleep. It was evident the guests were wearing ALL their valuables. So Arthur went to the window and started to climb down when he saw several guests on the ground below. They were chatting idly and a servant was pouring some drinks.

Escape from the window was impossible. There was but one other way. He must stake everything on his ability to appear as one of the guests. He smoothed down his hair, adjusted his tie, and started toward the stairway. Someone was coming up. He must not be seen there. It would be fatal to his plans. Somehow he must get downstairs without being seen.

ANNA BLAKE BARRY continues to relate the inside details of her husband's part in the Cosden gem robbery and how he won the friendship of the Prince of Wales, together with an exciting description of how she was dragged into the investigation that followed the Jesse Livermore jewelry "job."

OUR PRESIDENTS AT A GLANCE

SECKATARY HAWKINS AND HIS FAIR and SQUARE CLUB

THE SOLUTION.

MONDAY.—We boys had a good time yesterday sled riding down Dobel's hill. But this morning the the snow nearly all melted. We used Johnny McLaren's sled first, but later Jerry Moore brought down his big bob-sled, and we all got on that one. We forgot to bring Johnny's sled back, and so today we went over to the hill to get it. Then Shadow Loomis proposed that we all get in his motor boat and take a trip down to Seven Willows Island and the back-water pool, in which lay the strange houseboat in which Penny and his sister Jo lived. There was a thin crust of ice on the banks of the river, and I slipped down and started sliding, and didn't stop until I almost reached the motor boat. The boys all laughed, and so did I, for I guess I looked funny, fat as I am, sliding down the bank. Then we got in and Shadow steered for Seven Willows Island. It has been a long time since I saw the island, and it brought back memories of other days when the Skinny Guy lived there. His old houseboat, which he and his daddy left when they went to Cuba, was still there, but it was rotting to pieces and almost in total ruin now. But right smack up against it stood a neat-looking new houseboat, painted in green and white. We all got out of the motor boat and went up to the houseboat. Silence lay all around. We knocked on the door. No answer. We knocked again. No answer. We looked in the windows. The houseboat seemed to be filled with furniture.

"How could anybody live in that houseboat, Shadow," I said, "when it is so chuck full of chairs and tables and lamps and—"

"It's the right houseboat, however," said Shadow. "This is the one I saw Penny and Jo living in up the river last week. Then they suddenly must have moved it. But since I saw it last, they have put a lot more furniture in it. I can't understand it."

"Well, maybe if we leave a note, Penny will find it here," said Johnny McLaren. "You write it, Hawkins."

And so I tore a little page out of my note book and wrote with a pencil:

"Dear Penny and Jo:

"Why don't you come to our club meetings any more? Remember, you still are members of our club. We are fair and square with you, and if you need our help we want to give it. If you find this note, come and see us."

I folded the little sheet of paper once, and then slipped it half-way under the front door.

TUESDAY.—Today Shadow Loomis and Johnny McLaren went out on spy duty together. That's a team for you—the two best in our whole High Order Spy System. Usually they work alone, because each is a little jealous of the other, but that houseboat down on the Island is a most interesting thing for these two spies right now. When they returned, they reported that my note was still sticking under the door of the houseboat. Penny and Jo had not been there. In fact, nobody had been there. Else that note would have been gone. Even if Stapoulos, our newest enemy, had been there, or any of his gang, all of them being as good if not better spies than our own, that note would have been picked up and brought back to the Stapoulos headquarters, wherever that may be. For none of the spy reports laid on my desk since the coming of Stapoulous—not one has made any mention of the place where Stapoulos and his gang meet. But we will find him and his hiding place. We have promised Judge Granbery to "Stop Stapoulos," and that shall be our watchword until Judge Granbery asks us to quit being his Junior Police.

WEDNESDAY.—Lieutenant Phillips came down to our clubhouse today to see me. He is the officer about whom you read in some of our previous adventures, because Phillips was always the chief assistant of Detective Jeckerson. "Hawkins," he said, "I have just had a talk with Judge Granbery about a case in Watertown in which Foy's Furniture Factory lost a lot of furniture." And immediately my mind went back to the houseboat on the island, chuck full of furniture. My heart sank. "Well, Phillips," I said, "what do you want us to do?" The officer smiled. "You need not ask," he said, "because you know that I was with you and Jeckerson on many cases. Judge Granbery said if the loot of the thieves was hidden anywhere around here, you would know with your high order spy system. I want your help, that's all." I told him we boys would help. I promised to call him on the phone as soon as I had anything important to tell him.

THURSDAY.—Today Shadow Loomis came in my writing room and sat down. "Hawkins," he said, "I think Penny and Jo are mixed up with that Stapoulos gang. Else, why is their houseboat hidden down there on the back-water pool? And why did Penny and Jo disappear from our club meetings the moment they learned that our cllub was going to fight the Stapoulos gang?"

"No, I can't believe you're right Shadow," I told him. And yet I had my doubts. It seemed to me that Stapoulos and his outfit knew about the Foy Furniture Company's complaint. In fact Stapoulos had mentioned that proudly the first day we talked together. He was a boaster, I knew. But he had told me very plainly that his spies were as good if not better than mine. Then, if he was right, why hadn't his spies found the houseboat? Because it was their hiding place, and Penny and Jo were members of the Stapoulos gang—or had been at one time. Perhaps Penny was in charge of the job of hiding the stolen goods until they could be safely sold somewhere. That seemed probable.

FRIDAY.—One thing that was noticeable in all of the spy reports which I found on my desk today was that none of them mentioned seeing anything of Stapoulos or any of his boys. Johnny McLaren and Bill Darby had an interesting report, however. Here it is:

"We rode over to the Pelham ridge today and passed the Beasley cabin, which belongs to you, Hawkins, and it is still being used by Bullen and Hare, the two boys who have started a new gang. They have quite a little crowd in that cabin of yours, Hawkins, and if you don't chase them out shortly your cabin might be a wreck. We happened to overhear some remarks as we passed under the window. It is almost certain that Bullen and Hare are trying to take all the boys away from Stapoulos. They have a grudge against the Greek boy, and already have seven boys joined up, whom they coaxed out of Stap's gang. Nothing exciting to report."

Nothing exciting to report, eh? Well, perhaps not at this moment. But in that note was a sure promise of an explosion that was sure to happen soon. I knew Bullen. He had been around here as long as I, and although we boys had had but little to do with him, we knew that he was a tough fighter, and once he set his mind to do a thing, he did it. If it was now his intention to steal all of Stapoulos' boys away from the latter, then he would do that very thing. But Stapoulos—he was no weakling, either. He had quite a bad reputation in Watertown. They had not been able to pin anything on him, but no one doubted that he was slick and smart, and that if he and Bullen ever came to a show-down, there would be plenty of trouble popping up all of a sudden.

Shadow Loomis came in shortly afterwards, and I could see that he had something important to say to me. "Well," I said, "what's on your mind—come on, let's have it?" And he turned suddenly to look at me sharply. "I saw Penny and Jo," he said, shortly.

"What!" I exclaimed. "Where? Where did you see them—"

"With Bullen and Hare. They didn't know I saw them. It was over on Pelham ridge, by your cabin—"

"That's enough!" I said. "Get Lieutenant Phillips on the telephone, Shadow."

"Why? What are you going to do? Not—"

"Never mind, do as I tell you!" He got the number, I talked to Phillips myself. I told him I was ready to give him some important news. He promised to be down as soon as he could tomorrow, Saturday.

SATURDAY.—What I intended doing, I couldn't do. Phillips came down, and I told him that I had a clue to the Foy Furniture case. Of course, I meant the houseboat filled with furniture. He was all excited and eager to go. So we got in Shadow's motor boat, and went down to Seven Willows Island and the back-water pool. And there I got a surprise and a disappointment. The houseboat with the furniture was gone. Only the old rotting hulk of the Skinny Guy's derelict lay in that pool hidden by wildwood. I explained it all to Phillips as we rode back to the clubhouse and he rather scolded me for not reporting a clue as soon as it was found.

"You got to find those two kids, Hawkins," said Phillips. "I shall go at once to Judge Granbery's office. I shall await you there. Report to me as soon as you can find those two kids, Penny and Jo. They will tell us where to find Stapoulos—"

"You don't think that Penny and Jo are in league with Stapoulos and his gang, do you?"

"I do. Find them, and bring them to Judge Granbery's—"

And so I hurried back to the clubhouse and got Johnny and Bill and Shadow, and we sat around and talked. I asked them if they thought they could bring Bullen and Hare to our clubhouse, and they said they thought they could manage it. I sent them out while I called up Phillips, asking him to come at once. In an hour they returned, not only with Bullen and Hare, but with—big surprise!—Penny and Jo!

"You can't pin anything on me," said Bullen to me, "but I can tell you something. These two kids won't join my club. The say they belongs to yours. But don't believe them, Hawkins. They belong to Stapoulos and his crowd! Ask 'em! If they tell you the truth—well, you might be able to find out what you and Lieutenant Phillips are trying to uncover."

"Ah!" I said, "so you, too, have spies, eh Bullen?"

"Fairly good ones, yes! We manage to find out all we want to know."

"Well, what do you mean by saying 'if Penny and Jo will tell the truth?"

"About the furniture stolen from Foy's—Stapoulos uses these two kids to take care of his loot and to hide it until it can be moved safely—"

"Is that so?" said a voice from the doorway, suddenly, and accompained by a stamping of feet and a thumping of a stick. We turned to see Judge Granbery and Lieutenant Phillips. "Well, well, young fellow, I'm glad I came in time to hear that last remark. I am responsible for law and order on this old river bank. And Lieutenant Phillips, you will please take in custody those two youngsters there, who are known by the simple names of Penny and Jo—"

With a sudden cry of gladness both Penny and Jo sprang forward.

"You will do nothing of the kind, Phillips!" broke in a new voice. And again we all turned to see a tall man, with a very serious face, standing on the threshold. With a sudden cry of gladness both Penny and Jo sprang forward. The newcomer stooped down and gathered the two in his arms.

"What do you mean, sir?" demanded Judge Granbery thumping the floor with his cane.

"Just this, your honor," said the man. "I am the father of these two kids. Their mother is dead. I do the best I can by them, sir. I learned only lately that they had been mixed up with a bad bunch of boys in Watertown, and I learned too late of what that gang had been up to. But I knew it was the Foy Furniture case, and I set about to put a stop to it and to save everything that the Foy Company had lost. I thought of a scheme—perhaps I could lend my houseboat to the kids—and I did. And everything that was stolen, your honor, is in that houseboat. And I have always kept that houseboat hidden, so that when the time came I could take my kids away from here. I would be able to restore everything to the rightful owners. And now the time has come, sir. I am going west—to California, sir. Before I go, I should like to have you know that at no time were my boy and girl knowingly mixed up with this business. They did not know what that kid Stapoulos and his followers were doing. They thought that every bit of furniture was brought to make our houseboat more cheerful. Only lately, sir, when the rest of the furniture was brought, filling the houseboat so completely that it was not roomy enough to live in—only then did my boy come to me and ask me about it. I told him the truth, your honor. He begged me quickly to change the hiding place of the houseboat again. It seems that a steamer was coming up the river tomorrow or the next day to take Stapoulos and his daddy and their loot to a place where it could be sold. And so, if you will please send Lieutenant Phillips with me, Judge, I will lead you to the houseboat in which you will find all the furniture that Foy's has lost. And after that, sir, I trust you will allow me and my kiddies to leave in peace, and glad we will be to get away from here."

"Indeed!" said Judge Granbery, and he gave a false coughing sound. "Indeed you shall, sir. Lieutenant Phillips, you will go with this man. I am certain that we can depend upon his word. And I want to thank again my Junior Police—and you, Seck Hawkins, in particular. Keep up the good work. As for you—" and he turned to Bullen and Hare—"remember that we intend to keep law and order on this river bank. Go—get out of here—and if you have any fights in the future, please remember that they have got to be fair and square, or you will hear from me. I want no rough play around this town—my junior police will see to that."

Which we did.

(Copyright, 1933, by Robert F. Schulkers.)

Dear Pen Pals:

This week we will write about George Washington, the great general of the American Revolution, often referred to as the Father of His Country. But most of us like to remember him as the Truthteller. He never told a lie. And that is one of the most important things we have to remember in order to live up to our motto, "Fair and Square."

* * * *

Washington was a great inspiration to his soldiers, and were it not for his words of cheer and encouragement, it is hard to tell just what would have happened during that terrible winter at Valley Forge, when his army of noble-minded men were compelled to undergo cold and hunger. But he kept up his courage, and the soldiers admired him for it and followed his example, and they won.

It's a great pleasure to sit down and write about Washington, and you can write a story or a verse if you wish. If you can't do any of these things, just sit down and write a letter. And even if you have tried before, without success, don't give up. Suppose Washington had given up during that awfully cold winter, would he have won the war? It was his determination to carry the work to a finish that made him great. And it is keeping everlastingly at it that wins in anything. So sit down and write.

And now the lucky pen pals who have won a book of our club's earlier adventures down on the old river bank. If you have written a letter and have not seen it among these lucky winners, don't give up the ship. Remember, a quitter never wins, and a winner never quits. Keep at it until you win, like the Alabama member who wrote the following:

Dear Seck:

I am sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope for one of your good luck coins. I am sure the good luck coins will bring good luck to me and any one else who has one, if you have touched it.

Seck, I have never written you before, but from now on I will try to write you often, and maybe some time I will win a book.

I couldn't do without the paper now since I have started to read your weekly story and daily strip.

I am sure that your Fair and Square Club will always win in the end, and I will stick to it until the end.

Yours, fair and square,
SARALYN BRITTAIN, 10.
404 West Point St., Roanoke, Ala.

And so we bring our meeting to a close again, and adjourn till next week, same time, same page. If you happen to be one who is not yet a member of our club, fill out the membership coupon on this page and send it in at once, and you will then receive by return mail a club button and a membership card.

Bye, till next week.

Yours, fair and square,

Seckatary Hawkins

Dear Seckatary Hawkins:

Say Seck, I'm a "detective" same as you are. I have the secret codes which tell when another detective is in danger and the code to write messages. My sister and I have lots of fun sending messages and playing that we are "detectives." Gee, wouldn't it be fun to be a real detective! I guess I will never be one for I had rather be a blacksmith like my daddy.

Seck, tell the other boys to write to me.

Yours, fair and square,
DWIGHT WATSON, 8.
Route 3, Roopville, Ga.

Dear Seck:

Dear Seck:

I am 12 years of age and am well and strong. I have been reading your pieces in the paper and enjoy them very much.

I am going in the morning and tell my friends about you and your pieces in the paper. I know they will enjoy them just as I have.

During the week my friends and I always go down in a pasture and play as much as we can like we are on the water bank. It is much fun.

Since I have given you an idea what I do weekly, I hope you will be informed of my Sunday's occupation. After breakfast I always get ready to go to church and there we stay an hour. After dinner I write out the sermon, I, however, have not failed to do this.

Yours, fair and square,

Dear Seck:

I am having a good time. It hasn't snowed here so we could go sleigh riding, but I have a bicycle and I ride it. I have been riding some this evening after the rain.

I reckon you thought I had quit writing, but I will always remember the old slogan that "A quitter never wins and a winner never quits." Since school started I haven't had much time to write for studying.

I would like to be on the old river bank with you and your gang. I hope you find out what the two tree-houses and their owner mean. The dancing light must mean something for you to solve.

Yours, fair and square,
HARVEY CONLEY,
Hawkinsville, Ga.

Dear Seck:

It doesn't snow much here, so I don't have the privilege of snow fun. But I have much fun skating down a hill in front of our house and running about and playing with the neighborhood children. We play hide and seek, snake in the gutter, and sometimes a crowd of us girls get together and skate.

Seck, I am 57 inches tall, nine years old and weigh 90 pounds. My birthday is December 21.

Yours, fair and square,
ELDNA STURGIS,

Today's Prize.

January 29, 1933.

Dear Seck:

Fair and square is a dandy motto. I have read some of your adventures and I wonder what those lights are.

You have the dandiest club in town and I am glad to join.

I am 8 years old, in the third grade of E. Rivers school, Atlanta, Ga. In front of E. Rivers there is a stone which says that Peachtree Road and Peachtree Creek got their name from the standing peach tree.

Roosevelt visited E. Rivers school this year. It was a great joy.

Buckhead, a place near my home, got its name from a buckhead that was found by explorers in a tree in that part of Peachtree Heights. Dead man's curve, a place near my home is named Dead Man's Curve because there are so many wrecks there.

Yours, fair and square,
PAUL RAMSEY JR.

FLOWERS THAT BLOOM IN THE SHADE :-: BY W. ELBRIDGE FREEBORN

BEFORE discussing those flowers that through ages of environment are particularly well adapted to satisfactory growth in the shade, it might be well to stop and see why and how flowers bloom. To understand this is simply a study of essentials to plant life. These essentials may be divided into three divisions, food, air and sunshine.

Through a thorough consideration of these essentials we may be able to grow flowers to greater advantage in the shade and for that matter, probably better able to grow all plants either in the shade or in the full sunshine.

Plant foods have always been, and always will be of tremendous interest, since they are the very first essentials of proper plant growth. I have always preferred the name plant foods to the name fertilizers, not through any ill feeling towards the word fertilizers, but through the feeling that a better understanding might be made through the word plant foods.

Plants may take food from the soil only through the water in the soil. In other words, when the plants, through their roots, take water from the soil to carry it to their leaves, they hold whatever fertilizers are in the water. For this reason it has often been said that the mechanical condition of the soil is more important than the chemical condition of the soil. A soil in good condition is well supplied with decayed manure, vegetable matter or peat moss, and is very fibrous. It is easily worked, and is teeming with bacteria, which work to release the plant food which most soil contains.

We'll have to admit that it seems that we're straying somewhat from our subject, but if we bear those three or four facts in mind, it will be easier to understand why some plants will not grow in the shade under normal conditions.

Usually these shady situations are caused by a number of trees or large shrubs which surround the place in which we want to plant blooming flowers. In some instances, the flower beds are already beneath the limbs of these trees.

A constant fight is obliged to go on there between the trees and the flowers—the oldest fight in nature, the survival of the fittest. The trees and the flowers both try to get the necessary food and water, and oftentimes there isn't enough for both. In that case the trees, being larger and stronger, eventually kill out the flowers, but survive, themselves.

At this point in the struggle we may step in and save both the flowers and the trees by supplying sufficient moisture and food for both, at the same time improving the mechanical condition of the soil so that plenty of plant food is available after it has been placed there.

So, we find that preparation of the beds is of utmost importance when planting in the shade.

The Hoe vs. The Hose.

The careful gardener conserves more water than he applies. By preventing the soil from baking and cracking at the surface we prevent the escape of moisture into the air and thereby conserve it below. Plants give off large quantities of water from their leaves, but if one keeps the soil well stirred after each rain, there will be but little loss of moisture from the dry, powdery surface.

Another big help to plants in the shade is sufficient air circulation. This may be easily improved by the judicious removal of a few limbs from the trees and shrubs.

Through these various precautions and preparations before planting, and through proper care after planting, a great many flowers can be made to grow in the shade, that ordinarily will not. At the same time, other flowers grow at their best, or even flower well enough to bother with them, when planted in the shade. In other words, those flowers that at their best will have a difficult time, we will not discuss, but we will carefully select those that will have the best chance.

As a general statement annuals are not lovers of shade, but there are some which may be depended on. Some annuals are now seasonable. These we will discuss mostly.

The sweet alyssum is one of our most beloved white edging plants. The double sweet ayssum is widely used by commercial florists for design work. The foliage is heavy generally grown in the shade will flower much more profusely.

Much grief can be saved by the proper selection of flowers for growth in the shade. However, those flowers, such as zinnias, that only reach their full perfection when grown in the full sun—and we mean our full Georgia sun—can never be expected to and the flowers are more showy. The various sorts are admirably adapted to rock gardens, old-fashioned gardens, pots, hanging baskets and borders round other flowers. They well with other flowers in attractive vase arrangements.

Few of our flowers are as fantastic in form as the snapdragon, (antirrhinum-majus). At the same time the colors attract us. There are delicate pinks, yellows and deep maroons. Seed may be sown indoors when an early start is desired, but they bloom nicely when planted directly in the open soil.

Centaurea or cornflower comes in a popular blue, purple, rose or white sort. The double varieties are fuller, more symmetrical and larger, so that these are by far the best to cultivate. The various sorts are good cut flowers, especially the sweet sultans and cornflowers.

As a cut flower the China aster is highly popular and generally admired for its colors, rose-pink, white, violet, purple, red, light pink and lavender. It has splendid keeping qualities, and the flower stand rough usage.

Clarkia is a native of our western states, and was first found by members of the Lewis-Clark expedition, hence the name. The flowers are single and double and range from deep rose through lilac and light pink, to white. An outstanding characteristic is the drooping buds before they open and the fact that single blooms normally have four petals. The plants rarely grow over 2 feet tall, and bloom from July to October, Clarkia is very hardy and seeds may be sown outdoors early in the spring.

Cynoglossum, which is a lovely blue forget-me-not-like flower, has been introduced to our gardens and cataloged as the Chinese forget-me-not. It grows 2 feet tall with long sprays of deep, clear blue flowers produced for a rather short season in the early summer. It makes a splendid blue border plant, and a rather good cut flower.

Eschscholtiza, the state flower of California, is a silky, golden yellow flower which blooms very profusely. We have both singles and doubles in a great range of colors—creamy-white, carmine, deep pink, orange, lemon and coral-pink. The California poppy spreads over the ground, but grows about a foot tall. The leaves are grayish green and add much to the simple beauty of these flowers which appear profusely from June until frost.

Lupines are attractive plants bearing pea-like flowers in whorls upon long, graceful spikes. The lupine blooms during the summer and grows 2 to 3 feet tall. It makes a fine border plant and an exquisite cut flowers. Do not transplant lupines.

The pansy, it would seem, is one of the most alluring of all garden flowers. Its little faces make most of us laugh when we look at them.

The pansy is an ideal border or bedding plant and with all its charm, there are some persons who do not grow them.

Every one has some room for petunias because they are the most profuse flowering of any annuals. The colors have been improved to such an extent that there are now varieties to please us all; clear blues, rich purples, violets, pinks, whites and striped sorts; the giant doubles are marvels of the breeder's art, the frilled sorts are popular—but why continue?

Perennials.

The garden's gold is greatly enchanced in autumn by the sorts of rudbeckias, especially the goldenglow, which is the double form of rudbeckia. The showy character of the plants make them especially useful in the bold masses for the border. The goldenglow is valued where there are outbuildings, fences and unsightly objects to be hidden. All of the sorts make excellent cut flowers.

The bleedingheart or dicentra is one of our most showy old-fashioned flowers, which everyone loves. It grows from 2 feet to 4 feet tall and spreads out almost the same distance. The leaves are a light, transparent green, with heart-shaped flowers, pink and rosy crimson in color, produced in sprays along the stems.

Candytuft, a low-growing evergreen shrub, is in reality one of the best flowers in its class. It grows from 9 inches to 12 inches high and spreads out making low mats which are covered with flat, dense, clusters of the purest of white flowers. The foliage of the candytuft is evergreen and is one of the best plants grown for edging purposes.

The moss phlox or phlox subulata grows wild, and blooms early in the spring. Because of its spreading habit it is usually found growing on the surface of rocks, in fields, or over dry banks. In the rockery it is often planted in dry corners, because it withstands drought so well, and its dense growth soon makes an admirable ground covering, especially when hundreds of small clusters of pink and white flowers come out in the spring. It is also for borders, between stepping stones, etc.

Aquilegia or columbine, makes an excellent rock garden plant as well as a good border plant, where they make clumps sometimes 2 feet in diameter.

Lilies of the valley grow well in shady spots where some other flowers become pouty and will not grow. A good soil, well prepared and heavily fertilized and a fair degree of moisture will suit the needs of this lovely plant excellently.

Violets are the true favorites of all. The wild violets may be used for naturalizing in the informal areas of the garden, even beneath shrubs. The forms of tufted pansies, because of their long season of bloom, are excellent for edging plants. As rock garden subjects, violas are unexcelled.

WHAT TO DO IN FEBRUARY.

MULCHING—February is a good month for all kinds of mulching. The rose bed, perennial garden and shrubbery border should be protected. The best material for this mulching is a mixture of sheep manure, peat moss and woods earth; one bale of peat moss, 100 pounds of sheep manure and one wheelbarrow of woods earth.

FERTILIZER—It is also time to fertilize the lawn with a light application of some good fertilizers, such as bone meal or sheep manure. These two fertilizers are much to be preferred to the highly concentrated ones at this season of the year. Use raw bone meal for bulbs and perennials.

PRUNING—Take the tall stems out of hybrid perpetual roses as well as the dead wood. Wait until next month to do the final pruning of rose bushes. Remove the dead wood from all shrubbery and evergreens and give the fruit trees a good pruning.

SPRAYING—Now that fruit trees are dormant, be sure and give them a good, thorough spraying with scalecide, and for peach trees use dry lime sulphur.

What Has Happened To Justice

Dutchess County Fears Return of Fiend Who Knifed Germonds

By PETER LEVINS.

WHEN justice fails in a big city, the effect upon the inhabitants is quite different from what it is in a rural community. In a city the people feel that they are still well protected from a recurrence of the crime, even though they realize that the murderer has not been caught. In the country, on the other hand, such a failure breeds a feeling of insecurity, and for long afterward the people are apprehensive. They reason, logically enough, that since the killer has not been caught he may still be in their midst, and may strike again.

Inhabitants of Dutchess county, N. Y., for two years haunted by the fear that the Germond ogre would return some dark night and slaughter them in their beds, will feel secure only when police have jailed the stabber, said to be under surveillance now.

The Germonds lived on a farm in the town of Stanfordville, northeast of Poughkeepsie. The house and barns were all in plain view of the road and the surrounding country. The Poughkeepsie bus passed the property.

The family, unobtrusive and retiring as most such families are in that section, consisted of four persons. James Husted Germond, 47; his wife, Mabel Gregory Germond, 47; their daughter, Bernice, 18, and their son, Raymond, 12. Other Germonds were scattered throughout the county—Paul Germond, brother of James, lived on a farm about two miles up the road.

So far as is known, James Germond had no enemies, and nothing of any significance happened before the crime. That is, nothing in the lives and behavior of the principals.

On November 26, 1930, the day before Thanksgiving, Germond and his son drove into Millbrook to transact some business. He first called at the National bank there, cashed a milk check for $214.47, and took from the bank cash to the total of $154.43. Then he paid some bills around town, and while on the way home, in mid-afternoon, stopped at the farm of his brother Paul.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Germond was at home, and Bernice was attending school at the Eastern College in Poughkeepsie.

Bernice, as usual, took the bus for home late in the afternoon.

It was recalled later that a certain rough-looking man boarded the bus in Bangall, a town more than two miles beyond the Germond place. This passenger however had not gone on to Bangall but had alighted at Willow Brook station one mile this side of the Germond farm.

Bernice Germond alighted from the bus near her home at 5:20 o'clock.

* * * *

The morning of Friday, the 28th, dawned—a cold wintry day—and when Germond did not appear with his milk as usual at the creamery of the Borden Dairy company, in Stanfordville, the employes began to wonder why it was.

Finally, Willard Coons, an employe of the dairy, was sent to the Germond place to find out why the milk had not arrived.

Coons drove along the pike and turned into the Germond barnyard. No one was in sight. Only the disturbing clanking of a milking machine broke the dead silence of that frozen morning. Coons went to the cowbarn—no one was there. He went to the wagon shed close by the cowbarn, shouting a greeting.

Then, as he swung open the door, his shout died in his throat. There before his eyes lay the bodies of James Germond and his son, frozen in death, and bloody from many knife wounds.

Coons backed away from the grisly sight and ran for his car. He sped to the home of Paul Germond, screaming the dreadful news as his car bounced into the barnyard.

"Husted's been murdered—Husted's been murdered!"

Paul Germond ran out of the house with his father-in-law, George Rogers. The dairy employe stammered on about his discovery.

"What about the others—Mabel and Bernice?" demanded Germond.

Coons shook his head distractedly. "I didn't see 'em! I shouted when I got there and nobody answered! Everything was quiet!"

Germond and Rogers hastened to the scene while Coons spread the alarm through Stanfordville. Within a little while the whole town knew. Neighbors and police officers hurried to the quiet—so quiet—farmhouse.

Meanwhile Paul and his father-in-law arrived there. They viewed the two bodies in the wagon shed, then made for the house. They pushed open the kitchen door, shotguns held ready in their hands.

There, on the kitchen floor, lay the bodies of Mrs. Germond and Bernice.

They, too, had been stabbed. Husted had been stabbed four times, Raymond seven times, the mother and daughter five times each. In each instance the last wound had apparently been a direct thrust to the heart.

The investigators decided that Germond and his son were slain in the barnyard and dragged into the wagon house. Mrs. Germond and Bernice had been killed where their bodies were found in the kitchen. Neither of the women had been, as the phrase goes, criminally assaulted.

A pair of brown cotton gloves, with a knife cut and blood stained, were found on the kitchen table.

Germond's wallet, containing about $80 or $90, was missing. His hip pocket, where he carried the wallet, was turned inside out. His watch and silver in his pocket had not been taken, nor had the clothes of the other victims been searched.

What appeared to be the first promising clue came from Oakley Robinson, a storekeeper of Clinton Corners, a few miles from Stanfordville. He told the officers that a stranger had appeared at his store about 8 p. m., November 26, and inquired about the bus to Poughkeepsie.

Later, it was established that he had been seen walking along the highway from the direction of Stanfordville before he visited the store.

Robinson said that Edward H. Wing and Floyd Younghans, of Clinton Corners made arrangements to take the stranger to Poughkeepsie. Wing and Younghans said they had taken the man to the railroad station in Poughkeepsie. The man had told them he was a Borden employe, and that he had received a telegram that his mother in Hudson was dying.

He gave a name that sounded like "Florentine Chase" and said he knew Ernest Nardone, who operated a sand bank near Washington Hollow, and Mike Saccomandi, keeper of a boarding house.

From descriptions of this man the police decided that he was the same stranger who had ridden the bus that day, inquiring for Bangall. The officers set to work to trace him and by the end of the day, through questioning Nardone and Saccomandi, they were able to announce that they were seeking a Spaniard called Bosco, whose first name was Florentine, and who had been employed by the Lane Construction Company as a highway worker near the Germond home.

* * * *

Meanwhile officers at the farm had been searching for clues, particularly the murder weapon. The first day's search for the knife proved futile but at noon the following day, William Lescyck, a Poughkeepsie taxi man, who had taken some newspapermen to the scene, discovered a small butcher knife not more than 50 feet from the wagon shed.

It had been purchased, the police announced, at the DuBois Supply Company, in Poughkeepsie. Six such knives had been sold since June.

Among the first to be questioned as a possible suspect was Steve Leko, a Hungarian farm hand on Jamieson Hill, adjoining the Germond farm. He was held for several days while Sergeant Alexander Kormondy, of the state police, questioned him in Hungarian. Finally, they released him.

What seemed to be the big break came on December 13, when Florentine Oispurn Eirmendi, alias Bosco, the Spanish highway worker, was taken into custody in Brooklyn. Two detectives picked him up in a pool room near where he was living. He denied all knowledge of the crime.

Taken to Dutchess county, he was subjected to a stiff examination by District Attorney John R. Schwartz and his aids. He admitted being in the vicinity of the Germond home on November 1, but insisted he was nowhere near the scene at the time of the murders. Several persons positively identified him as the stranger seen on the bus, but others failed to pick him out as the man.

On January 1, while Eirmendi was in jail as a material witness, Sheriff Vernard J. Rockefeller went out of office, being succeeded by Oakleigh Cookingham. Close, now an assemblyman, became a special investigator in the district attorney's office. The heads of the investigation, already under fire for their failure thus far in the mystery, promised they would redouble their efforts to track down the murderers. (As so often happens, the Germond case became a political football in that section.)

Eirmendi was held for 55 days in the county jail and was then released. District Attorney Schwartz, in the face of considerable criticism, declared he was convinced that Bosco was innocent.

Next, the county board of supervisors, at a meeting in February, offered a reward of $20,000 for the arrest of the killer. This offer started several private investigations, including one by Manning Cleveland, and a deputy sheriff, former police commissioner of Poughkeepsie, and one time wealthy sportsman of that section.

But the weeks and months passed, fruitlessly. Certain citizens protested the appointment of Assemblyman Close as special investigator, so Schwartz announced that Close had finished his work and that in the future the inquiry would proceed through the regular channels. Later, in the year residents circulated a petition asking that the grand jury investigate the mystery.

The matter was submitted to a regularly convened grand jury and that body returned a report commending the manner in which the investigation had been conducted.

The next real development in the case did not occur until July 7, 1932. On that day Andrew Nemes, 16, was brought to the sheriff's office by Manning Cleveland, Asa Arnold, a Stanfordville game warden, and State Trooper Robert Reeves, then stationed at Stanfordville, and in the presence of Assistant District Attorney Lavery the boy reiterated a confession, made earlier in the day, that he witnessed the Germond murders and that the murderer was Steve Leko.

Leko, in the meantime, had made no attempt to run away. He had notified the authorities whenever he changed jobs. Accordingly, it was a simple matter to rearrest him. He was taken into custody at a farm in New Paltz, Ulster county.

District Attorney Schwartz questioned Nemes and Leko at length. The farmhand maintained his innocence. The boy, on the other hand, began to weaken after several hours.

Finally, he said his confession was untrue. He said Manning had threatened him with the electric chair if he did not tell what happened, and so, figuring the best way out was to accuse somebody else, he had named Leko as the killer.

Schwartz, therefore, read the riot act to Cleveland, Arnold and Reeves and released Leko.

Although robbery persists as the only motive, other theories have been advanced. Among the theories is one that the family was murdered through a mistake—that an Italian family, living in a house that answered the description of the Germond house, and with the same family personnel, were the intended victims.

The order of the killings never has been established. It is generally understood that Germond was slain as he came to the rescue of the others, because he was apparently in the milk barn at the evening chores when he was called away. Witness the still operating milk machine. Also, a kerosene lamp in the barn had burned dry. A lamp in the kitchen had been turned out.

It is conceded as a strong possibility that the murder weapon came off the kitchen table. There were other utensils there when the murders were discovered. That would mean that the murderer was actually in the house before he started his wholesale slaughter.

Culbertson on Contract

EXPERT VS. AVERAGE.

By ELY CULBERTSON,

World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst.

THE difference between the mechanical bidding of the expert depends almost entirely on their method of valuation. Naturally, both classes must be governed by a certain set of rules, and these must always contain a certain amount of flexibility. The average player does not appreciate this fact, and if he does appreciate it, does not appreciate its importance. The expert unconsciously bows to the theory and follows it subconsciously.

This is why there are really two Culbertson systems—one which is dependent on several mathematical formulas worked out methodically over a period of years to cover the average number of hands, and the other which is based on what I like to call "plastic valuation." Another good bridge player is born every time one of these average players begins to value his hand by plastic methods, and the first step in this direction is an appreciation of the flexibility of rules. It is possible to go on counting honor-trick values and playing-tricks until the end of time, but if it is necessary to make this count through the use of pure mathematics, nothing more than a certain degree of sureness and soundness can be attained.

Perhaps it would be well to explain the best method of getting one's self into this seemingly difficult frame of mind, or, in other words, to explain just how the expert, although depending on a sound mathematical basis, still manages to dispense with it in his calculations.

The first thing to do is to attain a certain amount of visualization. If you hold 2 1-2 honor-tricks and your partner announces, through the use of a forcing takeout, that he holds 3 1-2, the fact that the combined hands hold 6 honor-tricks should immediately start a process of elimination running through your mind. Perhaps a certain bid made by one of the opponents has automatically eliminated some of the missing honors from partner's hand. In that case a picture of the honor strength should be more or less complete. The question of distribution is even easier. If your partner, at a later date in the bidding, shows another suit, rebids his own suit or supports yours, this procedure should locate at least 9 or 10 of his cards for you, divided in two or three suits. One more bid by him, and the first thing you know you are positive that his distribution is, say 5-4-3-1. With your own hand in front of you, the 26 cards can be combined, and it should be a simple matter to determine your limits.

If this process is repeated throughout the course of every hand which you play, you will find that it is no longer necessary; that you are unconsciously drawing inferences and painting complete pictures without the necessity of going through any steps at all.

I do not mean to underestimate the value of the playing-trick table; I am merely explaining how it is possible to graduate from one class into another by learning how to dispense with the table. It cannot be dispensed with without sound knowledge of it, but once it is memorized, the time has come when visual facts and not mathematical formulas should be placed in the foreground.

* * * *

Contract bridge would not be as fascinating a game as it is if the right opening lead were always the best opening lead. It is not at all hard for authorities of all kinds to lay down certain laws as to what should be led in any and all conditions against any and all contracts. No doubt it would be a tedious and lengthy process, but it could be done. Perhaps the reason why it never has been done is because the result would prove beneficial only something like 52 1-2 per cent of the time, the other 47 1-2 per cent of the time calling for pure genius; and there are few, even among the experts, who are capable of mastering this all-important qualification.

I might say that there are only two to my knowledge who combine both genius and knowledge of percentage. These two are Michael T. Gottlieb and Willard Karn. Time and again I have seen these players pull a card out of their hands that the merest tyro could criticize as an opening lead, and at the same time I have seen that this lead is the only one which could defeat the contract. Other times I have seen them resort to the most obvious lead and then again they were right, and still, in spite of all this, they are probably right no more than about 60 per cent of the time.

Perhaps, this point could best be covered by an illustration. I have a letter at hand from Montgomery P. Ford, of San Francisco, Cal., in which he bitterly complains at being criticized for making what he calls a brilliant lead. Upon a close analysis of the hand I am forced to agree that the lead he made I would undoubtedly have made myself, and that, in fact, the one lead I would not have made was the lead which would have defeated the contract.

North—Dealer.

North-South vulnerable.

	♠ 2 ♡ A K J ◇ A 10 9 8 7 2 ♣ 10 9 6
♠ A Q 10 8 6 5 ♡ 8 7 3 ◇ 6 5 4 3 ♣ —	N W E S	♠ 3 ♡ 5 4 ◇ K Q J ♣ A K Q J 5 4 3
	♠ K J 9 7 4 ♡ Q 10 9 6 2 ◇ — ♣ 8 7 2

The Bidding:

North	East	South	West
1◇	3♣	3♠	Dbl.
4◇	Dbl.	4♡	Pass
Pass	Dbl.	Pass	Pass
Pass

The bidding does not call for much comment. South was undoubtedly a little rash, but East's jump overcall had forced him to overbid and his hand was probably too strong distributionally to consider passing. The double was sound enough, and West certainly had no inkling that South had finally been able to fit his partner's suit. Had he known this, it is possible that he would have guessed the proper opening.

Mr. Ford opened the heart 8 on the theory that North and South could obtain tricks only through using their ruffing power and that this ruffing power must be destroyed as quickly as possible. He did not consider the possibility that the diamond suit might be established against him, as that suit had already been doubled rather emphatically by his partner. After the opening lead, of course, the hand was a laydown. Two ruffs in the South hand established the diamonds and five-odd were made very easily.

Consider now the rather peculiar lead of the spade ace. This lead would have compelled South to ruff the second round in dummy, in which case the diamond suit could never have been brought in; or to allow East to ruff, after which 2 club tricks would have to be lost. This lead is spectacular, but I doubt if it would be made by many players.

SOLUTION OF LAST WEEK'S PROBLEM.

Neither side is vulnerable. You have bid one club. Your partner has responded with one no-trump. You hold:

Spades	A Q 9 2
Hearts	A J 4
Diamonds	7
Clubs	A Q 10 6 3

What do you bid?

Answer: Two spades. Although the hand contains 4 plus honor-tricks, which together with partner's response should produce a game, it is inadvisable to force on this type of hand. Two spades is a sufficiently strong bid, as the spade suit obviously has only four cards, and partner, not having four spades, must at least bring the bidding back to clubs or no-trump. Of course, if your partner has four spades, he probably will have sufficient playing strength to raise your spade bid; but, until you find a fit of some sort on the hand or another free bid from partner, game is not definitely assured.

THIS WEEK'S PROBLEM.

Each Sunday I am giving a problem in bidding. This is No. 3 of the new series. The answer to today's problem will be given next Sunday.

Neither side is vulnerable. Your partner has bid one club. What do you bid, holding:

Spades	K 5 4
Hearts	Q 10 4 3 2
Diamonds	6 5 3
Clubs	J 8

BY ROBERT QUILLEN.

"PA got his new teeth this week an' they made him so nervous I thought for a while he was goin' to give up an' gum it the rest of his days.

"I reckon he would o' done it, too, but I got some o' the women to drop in an' make remarks about how young an' handsome he looked with his face unpickered an' spread apart, an' after that I seen him reared back in front of a lookin' glass with his teeth shinin' like a picket fence an' I knew they was in to stay.

"It's the only way to handle a male, young or old.

"I never could get my oldest boy to tote in wood and coal till I bragged on his stren'th, an' the second one never got reconciled to washin' regular till I got to takin' on about how handsome he was when he got the dirt off.

"Pa was that way, too. He was a Methodist an' I was a Baptist, an' I was kind o' scared he'd be stubborn about changin'. But I acted like it was all settled, an' told him how proud I was to have a husband so big-minded, an' when he tried to look modest I knew the guinea had lit. He wouldn't o' said nothin' if I'd made plans to join the Mormons.

WORN ON THE CRUISE

A Versatile Wardrobe Which Accommodates the Varied Activities of a Southern Vacation

THE Winter vacation season has begun, warm weather and sunshine are luring pleasure-seekers South and the decks of ocean liners are gay with laughter and bright frocks. The woman who is fortunate enough to plan a Winter cruise must include in her wardrobe frocks for every occasion. There should be available one or two or even three sports frocks, a trim bathing suit and attractive lounging pajamas. She must have a smart frock for the cocktail hour and at least two evening gowns.

And don't forget; no matter where your cruise takes you, you must include in your trunk at least one warm coat or suit. Even the sunniest and warmest of resorts sometimes fool us with a chilly day—and to have a good time, one must be not only well-dressed but comfortable.

A WARM SUIT OR COAT

In the group at the right, a suit of yellow monotone tweed with seven-eighths coat reveals the swagger silhouette. There are large patch pockets and a collar of white fox. A very gay sports coat of blue and white checked wool reveals swagger shoulders and a deep back yoke where the checks run diagonally. The white polo coat is slightly fitted to the waist, and reveals a narrow roll collar with tab end that buttons high, raglan shoulders and shaped patch pockets. The lightweight blue woolen coat has a collar and cape border of white caracul. Diagonal seaming adds distinction.

JAUNTY SPORTS CLOTHES

Sketched at the left, we see a striped red and white linen frock with cap sleeves and a high V-neck worn with a hip-length cape of navy blue linen. A blue belt is used on the frock. Another effective linen costume combines a simple navy blue frock with an over-blouse of yellow and white striped linen. Note the short puffed sleeves on the blouse, the rolled white collar and the egg-shaped buttons that mark the interesting closing. Let the ocean breezes blow if you are wearing this white angora wool suit with its double-breasted three-quarter coat and sleeves that puff at the shoulders. There are square patch pockets, white bone buttons and a long scarf knitted in red and white. The fitted silhouette is used to advantage in the yellow-green tweed suit with its three-quarter-length coat. A high double-breasted closing finishes with a small turn-back collar

THE FORMAL EVENING MODE

Expressed in the sketches at the right, we see a gown of white georgette with an all-over trim of gleaming silver beads. Note the tunic silhouette, the twisted shoulder straps and the sparkling rhinestone girdle. There is, too, a slight train. Very gay is the frock of lipstick red flat crepe with insets and a girdle of blue crepe dotted in white. The decollete is quite high in front and low in back and pointed seamings add interest. A stunning ensemble of white rough crepe comes with a short jacket that boasts a jabot of sable-dyed kolinsky emerging from the high closing. Rhinestone buttons are the only decorative touch.
